A NOTE ON
THE LATE ROMESH C. DUTT

Romesh Chunder Dutt, to whom English readers are indebted for the condensed metrical versions of the ancient Indian epics given in this volume, was one of the most distinguished sons of modern India. He came of a Hindu family standing high among the Kayasths, second of the great castes in Bengal, was born in 1848, and grew to manhood amid influences of deep spiritual disturbance. In those days an Indian youth who had felt the call of the West encountered the sternest opposition, from both his own family and the community, if he avowed his ambition of making the voyage to Europe. Romesh Dutt, having passed through the Presidency College, Calcutta, took his fate into his own hands. Accompanied by two friends, both of whom afterwards rose to eminence in Bengal, he secretly took ship, came to London, entered for the Indian Civil Service, and took third place in the open examination of 1869. He was the first of his race to attain the rank of divisional commissioner, and long before his retirement in 1897, at the end of twenty-five years' service, had made a high reputation as an administrator. He sat for a time in the Bengal Legislative Council, and, in recognition of his official work, received the Companionship of the Indian Empire. He died on November 30, 1909, at Baroda, the capital of the important Native State which he had served with brilliant success as revenue minister and dewan.

The influences which determined his literary activity were primarily European. As a student in Calcutta he had made acquaintance with the English classics, and later, while at University College, had read the poets insatiably. Nevertheless his first successes were achieved in his mother tongue. He wrote in Bengali, poems and plays, historical and social novels, and aroused a storm of protest within the orthodox community of his province by publishing a Bengali translation of the Rig Veda. In English, of which he had complete mastery, his first considerable essay was a history of Civilisation in Ancient India, which though not a work of original research, fulfilled a useful purpose in its day. When freedom from Government service gave him the opportunity he set himself to writing the Economic History of India and India in the Victorian Age, the two together forming his chief contribution to the subject which he, more than any other Indian of his time, had made his own. In these books, as in others of kindred theme and purpose, there is much criticism of British administration, strongly felt if temperately expressed. Apart from this, its more controversial side, the work of Romesh Dutt is valuable mainly in that it has helped to reveal, to his own people no less than to ours, the spiritual riches of ancient India.

BOOK I

ASTRA DARSANA

(The Tournament)

The scene of the Epic is the ancient kingdom of the Kurus which flourished along the upper course of the Ganges ; and the historical fact on which the Epic is based is a great war which took place between the Kurus and a neighbouring tribe, the Panchalas, in the thirteenth or fourteenth century before Christ.

According to the Epic, Pandu and Dhrita-rashtra, who was born blind, were brothers. Pandu died early, and Dhrita-rashtra became king of the Kurus, and brought up the five sons of Pandu along with his hundred sons.

Yudhishtir, the eldest son of Pandu, was a man of truth and piety ; Bhima, the second, was a stalwart fighter ; and Arjun, the third son, distinguished himself above all the other princes in arms. The two youngest brothers, Nakula and Sahadeva, were twins. Duryodnan was the eldest son of Dhrita-rashtra and was jealous of his cousins, the sons of Pandu. A tournament was held, and in the course of the day a warrior named Karna, of unknown origin, appeared on the scene and proved himself a worthy rival of Arjun. The rivalry between Arjun and Karna is the leading thought of the Epic, as the rivalry between Achilles and Hector is the leading thought of the Iliad.

It is only necessary to add that the sons of Pandu, as well as Karna were, like the heroes of Homer, god-born chiefs. Some god inspired the birth of each. Yudhishtir was the son of Dharma or Virtue, Bhima of Vayu or Wind, Arjun of Indra or Rain-god, the twin youngest were the sons of the Aswin twins, and Karna was the son of Surya the Sun, but was believed by himself and by all others to be the son of a simple chariot-driver.

The portion translated in this Book forms Sections cxxxiv. to cxxvii. of Book 1. of the original Epic in Sanscrit (Calcutta edition of 1834).

I

THE GATHERING

Wrathful sons of Dhritrashtra, born of Kuru's royal race, Righteous sons of noble Pandu, god-born men of godlike grace,
Skill in arms attained these princes from a Brahman warrior bold, Drona, priest and proud preceptor, peerless chief of days of old !
Out spake Drona to the monarch in Hastina's royal hall, Spake to Bhishma and to Kripa, spake to lords and courtiers all :
"Mark the gallant princes, monarch, trained in arms and warlike art, Let them prove their skill and valour, rein the steed and throw the dart."

Answered then the ancient monarch, joyful was his royal heart,
"Best of Brahman and of warriors, nobly hast thou done thy part,
Name the place and fix the moment, hold a royal tournament,
Publish wide the laws of combat, publish far thy king's consent.
Sightless roll these orbs of vision, dark to me is noonday light, Happier men will mark the tourney and the peerless princes' fight.
Let the good and wise Vidura serve thy mandate and behest, Let a father's pride and gladness fill this old and cheerless breast."

Northwith went the wise Vidura to his sacred duties bound, Drona, blessed with skill and wisdom, measured out the tourney ground,

Clear of jungle was the meadow, by a crystal tountain graced, Drona on the lighted altar holy gifts and offerings placed,

Holy was the star auspicious, and the hour was calm and bright,
Men from distant town and hamlet came to view the sacred rite.

Then arose white stately mansions, built by architects of fame,
Decked with arms for Kuru's monarch and for every royal dame,
And the people built their stages circling round the listed green,
And the nobles with their white tents graced the fair and festive scene.

Brightly dawned the festal morning, and the monarch left his hall, Bhishma and the pious Kripa with the lords and courtiers all,

And they came unto the mansions, gay and glittering, gold-encased, Decked with gems and rich baidurya, and with strings of pearls be-laced.

Fair Gandhari, queen of Kuru, Pritha, Pandu's widowed dame, Ladies in their gorgeous garments, maids of beauty and of fame,

Mounted on their glittering mansions where the tints harmonious blend,

As, on Meru's golden mountains, queens of heavenly gods ascend !

And the people of the city, Brahmans, Vaisyas, Kshatras bold, Men from stall and loom and anvil gathered thick, the young and old,

And arose the sound of trumpet and the surging people's cry,
Like the voice of angry ocean, tempest-lashed, sublime and high !

Came the saintly white robed Drona, white his sacrificial thread, White his sandal mark and garlands, white the locks that crowned his head,

With his son renowned for valour walked forth Drona, radiant,
high,

So the Moon with Mars conjoined walks upon the cloudless sky !

Offerings to the gods immortal then the priestly warrior made,
Brahmans with their chanted mantra worship and obeisance paid,

And the festive note of sankha mingled with the trumpet's sound, Throngs of warriors, various-armed, came unto the listed ground.

II

THE PRINCES

Gauntleted and jewel-girdled, now the warlike princes came,
With their stately bows and quivers, and their swords like wreaths of flame,

Each behind his elder stepping, good Yudhishtira first of all,
Each his wondrous skill displaying held the silent crowd in thrall,

And the men in admiration marked them with a joyful eye,
Or by sudden panic stricken stooped to let the arrow fly !

Mounted on their rapid couriers oft the princes proved their aim,
Raining, hit the target with arrows lettered with their royal name,

With their glinting sunlit weapons shone the youths sublime and
high,

More than mortals seemed the princes, bright Gandharvas of the sky !

Shouts of joy the people uttered as by sudden impulse driven, Muffled voice of tens of thousands struck the pealing vault of heaven,

Still the princes shook their weapons, drove the deep resound ing car,

Or on steed or tusker mounted waged the glorious mimic war !

Mighty sword and ample buckler, ponderous mace the princes wield,

Brightly gleam their lightning rapiers as they range the listed field,

Brave and fearless is their action, and their movement quick and light,

Skilled and true the thrust and parry of their weapons flashing bright !

III

BHIMA AND DURYODHAN

Bhima came and proud Duryodhan with their maces lifted high,
Like two clubs with lofty tunets cleaving through the azure sky,

In their warlike arms accoutred with their girded loins they stood,

Like two untamed jungle tuskiers in the deep and echoing wood !

And as tuskiers range the forest, so they range the spacious field, Right to left and back they wander and their ponderous maces wield,

Unto Kuru's sightless monarch wise Vidura drew the scene, Pritha proudly of the princes spake unto the Kuru queen.

While the stalwart Bhima battled with Duryodhan brave and strong,
Fierce in wrath, for one or other, shouted forth the maddened throng,

"Hail to Kuru prince Duryodhan!" "Hail to Bhima hero proud!" Sounds like these from surging myriads rose in tumult deep and loud.

And with troubled vision Drona marked the heaving restless plain,
Marked the crowd by anger shaken, like the tempest-shaken main,

To his son he softly whispered quick the tumult to appease,
Part the armed and angry wrestlers, bid the deadly combat cease,

With their lifted clubs the princes slow retired on signal given,
Like the parting of the billows, mighty-heaving, tempest-driven!

Came forth then the ancient Drona on the open battle-ground, Stopped the drum and lofty trumpet, spake in voice like thunder's sound:

"Bid him come, the gallant Arjun! pious prince and warrior skilled,
Arjun, born of mighty INDRA, and with VISHNU's prowess filled."

IV

THE ADVENT OF ARJUN

Gauntleted and jewel-girdled, with his bow of ample height, Archer Arjun pious-hearted to the gods performed a rite,

Then he stepped forth proud and stately in his golden mail encased Like the sunlit cloud of evening with the golden rainbow graced,

And a gladness stirred the people all around the listed plain,
Voice of drum and blare of trumpet rose with sankha's festive strain!

“Mark ! the gallant son of Pandu, whom the happy Pritha bore, Mark ! the heir of INDRA’S valour, matchless in his arms and lore,
 Mark ! the warrior young and valiant, peerless in his skill of arms, Mark ! the prince of stainless virtue, decked with grace and varied charms !”

Pritha heard such grateful voices borne aloft unto the sky,
 Milk of love suffused her bosom, tear of joy was in her eye !

And where rested Kuru’s monarch, joyous accents struck his ear,
 And he turned to wise Vidura seeking for the cause to hear :

“Wherefore like the voice of ocean, when the tempest wind-prevail,
 Rise the voices of the people and the spacious skies assail ?”

Answered him the wise Vidura, “It is Pritha’s gallant boy, Godlike moves in golden armour, and the people shout for joy !”

“Pleased am I,” so spake the monarch, “and I bless my happy fate, Pritha’s sons like fires of immortality sanctify this mighty State !”

Now the voices of the people died away and all was still, Arjun to his proud preceptor showed his might and matchless skill.

Towering high or lowly bending, on the turf or on his car,
 With his bow and glist’ning arrows Arjun waged the mimic war,

Targets on the wide arena, mighty tough or wondrous small,
 With his arrows still untailing, Arjun pierced them one and all !

Wild-boar shaped in plates of iron coursed the wide extending field,

In its jaws five glist’ning arrows sent the archer wondrous-skilled,

Cow-horn by a thread suspended was by winds unceasing swayed,
 One and twenty well-aimed arrows on this moving mark he laid.

And with equal skill his rapier did the godlike Arjun wield, Whirling round his mace of battle ranged the spacious tourney field !

THE ADVENT OF KARNA

Now the feats of arms are ended, and the closing hour draws nigh, Mace's voice is hushed in silence, and dispersing crowds pass by,

Hark ! Like welken-shaking thunder wakes a deep and deadly sound,

Clink and din of warlike weapons burst upon the tented ground !

Are the solid mountains splitting, is it bursting of the earth,
 Is it tempest's pealing accent whence the lightning takes its birth ?

Thunders like these alarm the people for the sound is dread and
 high,

To the crest of the acroter turns the crowd with anxious eye !

Gathered round preceptor Drona, Pandu's sons in armour bright, Like the five-starred constellation round the radiant Queen of Night,

Gathered round the proud Duryodhan, dreaded for his exploits done,

All his brave and warlike brothers and preceptor Drona's son,

So the cows encackled Indra, thunder-wielding, fierce and bold,
 When he scattered Dana's children in the misty days of old !

But, hence the unknown warrior, gathered nations part in twain, Conqueror of hostile cities, lofty Karna treads the plain,

In his golden mail accoutred and his robes of yellow gold,
 Like a moving cliff in stature, armed concedes the chieftain bold,

Peerless, yet unpeered, bore him, peerless and er on the earth,
 Portion of the solar radiance, for the Sun inspired his birth !

Like a tiger in his fury, like a lion in his ire,
 Like the sun in noontide radiance, like the all-consuming fire,

Like a tree in bud and muscle, stately as a golden palm, Blessed with every mark of virtue, peerless, deathless, proud and calm !

With his looks serene and lofty held of war the chief surveyed, Scarce to Kripa or to Drona honour and obeisance made,

Still the panic-stricken people viewed him with unmoving gaze,
Who may be this unknown warrior, questioned they in hushed amaze !

Then in voice of pealing thunder spake fair Pritha's eldest son, Unto Arjun, Pritha's youngest, each, alas ! to each unknown :

"All thy feats of weapons, Arjun, done with vain and needless boast,

These and greater I accomplish—witness be this mighty host !"

Thus spake proud and peerless Karna in his accents deep and loud,
And as moved by sudden impulse joyous rose the listening crowd.

And a gleam of mighty transport glows in proud Duryodhan's heart,

Flames of wrath and jealous anger from the eyes of Arjun start,

Drona gave the word, and Karna, Pritha's war-beloving son,
With his sword and with his arrows did the feats by Arjun done !

VI

THE RIVAL WARRIORS

Joyful was the proud Duryodhan, gladness gleamed upon his face,
And he spake to gallant Karna with a loving fond embrace :

"Welcome, mighty armed chieftain ! thou hast victor's honours won,

Thine is all my wealth and kingdom, name thy wish and it is done !"

Answered Karna to Duryodhan, "Prince ! thy word is good as deed,

But I seek to combat Arjun and to win the victor's meed."

"Noble is the boon thou seekest," answered Kuru's prince of fame,

"Be a joy unto your comrades, let the toeman dread thy name !"

Anger flamed in Arjun's bosom, and he spake in accents rude, Unto Karna who in triumph calm and proud and fearless stood :

"Chief ! who comest uninvited, pratest in thy lying boast, Thou shalt die the death of braggarts—witness be this mighty host !"

Karna answered calm and proudly, "Free this listed field to all,
Whoso enter by their prowess, wait not, Arjun, for thy call,

Whoso champions take their places by their strength of arm and
might,

And their warrant is their falchion, valour sanctifies their right,

Angry word is coward's weapon, Arjun, speak with arrows keen,
Till I lay thee, witness Drona, low upon the listed green !"

Drona gave the word impartial, wrathful Arjun, dread of foes, Parted from his loving brothers, in his glist'ning arms arose,

Karna clasped the Kuru's princes, parted from them one and all,
With his bow and ample quiver proudly stepped the warrior tall.

Now the clouds with lurid flashes gathered darkling, thick and
high,
Lines of cranes like gleams of laughter sailed across the gloomy sky,

Rain-god INDRA over Arjun watched with father's partial love, Sun-god SURYA over Karna shed his light from far above,

Arjun stood in darkening shadow by the inky clouds concealed,
Bold and bright in open sunshine radiant Karna stood revealed !

Proud Duryodhan and his brothers stood by Karna calm and bold, Drona stood by gallant Arjun, and brave Bhishma warrior old,

Women too with partial glances viewed the one or other chief,
But by equal love divided silent Pritha swooned in grief !

Wee Vidura, true to duty, with an anxious hurry came,
Sandal drop and sprinkled waters roused the woe-distracted dame,

And she, alas ! her sons in combat, woe's of woes she uttered none, Speechless except, for none must father Karnā was her eldest son !

THE ANOINTMENT OF KARNA

Crowned Karnā, robed in purple, proudly trod the spacious green, Karna, crowned the world's dunes, spake upon the dreadful scene :

"Prince ! I have seen thee, I have, standing of Kṛṣṇa's right hand, Prince's valour I have seen, Prince's face of noble and noble grace,

I have seen and I have seen thee, I have seen thee, I have seen thee, Noble's mother and noble's father, and the line that ran the line,

*I have seen thee, I have seen thee, I have seen thee, I have seen thee,
I have seen thee, I have seen thee, I have seen thee, I have seen thee,*

Karna silent heard this mandate, rank nor lineage could he claim,
Like a raindrop pelted lotus bent his humble head in shame !

"Prince we reckon," cried Duryodhan, "not the man of birth alone,

Warlike leader of his forces as a prince and chief we own,

Karna by his warlike valour is of crowned kings the peer, Karna shall be crowned monarch, nations shall his mandate bear !"

Tooth they brought the corn and treasure, golden corn and water jar,

On the throne they seated Karna tamed in many a deathful war,

Brahmans chanted sacred mantras which the holy books ordain,
And anointed crowned Karna king of Arjuna's fair domain,

And they raised the red umbrella, and they waved the chhatra fan,
"Blessings on the crowned monarch, honour to the bravest man !"

Now the holy rites accomplished, in his kingly robes arrayed, Karna unto prince Duryodhan thus in grateful accents prayed :

"Gift of kingdom, good Duryodhan, speaketh well thy noble heart, What return can grateful Karna humbly render on his part ?"

"Grant my friendship," cried Duryodhan, "for no other boon I crave,
 Be Duryodhan's dearest comrade, be his helper true and brave."

"Be it so!" responded Karna, with a proud and noble grace,
 And he sealed his loyal friendship in a loving fond embrace!

THE CHARIOT-DRIVER

Dewed with drops of toil and languor, lo! a chariot-driver came,
 Loosely hung his scanty garments, and a staff upheld his frame,

Karna, now a crowned monarch, to the humble Suta sped,
 As a son unto a father, reverently bent his head!

With his scanty cloth the driver sought his dusty feet to hide,
 And he hailed him as a father hails his offspring in his pride,

And he clasped unto his bosom crowned Karna's noble head,
 And on Karna's dripping forehead, fresh and loving tear-drops shed!

Is he son of chariot driver? Doubts arose in Bhima's mind,
 And he sought to humble Karna with reproachful words unkind:

"Wilt thou, high-descended hero, with a Kuru cross thy brand?
 But the goad of cattle-drivers better suits, my friend, thy hand!

Wilt thou as a crowned monarch rule a mighty nation's weal?
 As the jackals of the jungle sacrificial offerings steal!"

Quivered Karna's lips in anger, word of answer spake he none,
 But a deep sigh shook his bosom, and he gazed upon the sun!

CLOSE OF THE DAY

Like a lordly tusker rising from a beauteous lotus lake, Rose Duryodhan from his brothers, proudly thus to Bhima spake:

"With such insults seek not, Bhima, thus to cause a warrior grief, Pitter taunts but I'll best thee, warlike tiger-wasted chief,

Proudest chief may meet the humblest, for like river's noble course, Noble deeds proceed in the warrior, and we question not their source !

Teacher Drona, priest and warrior, owns a poor and humble birth, Kripa, noblest of Goutamas, springeth from the lowly earth,

Known to me thy lineage Bhima, thine and of thy brothers four,
Anonymous gods your birth imparted, so they say, in days of yore !

Mark the great and gallant Karna decked in rings and weapons fair,

See dear breeds not badly tiger in her poor and lowly lair,

Karna comes to rule the wide earth, not fair Ansa's realms alone,
By his valour and his virtue, by the homage which I own,

And if prince or armed chieftain doth my word or deed gainsay,
Let him take his bow and quiver, meet me in a deadly fray !"

Load applauses greet the challenge and the people's joyful cry,
But the thickening shades of darkness fill the earth and evening sky,

And the red lamp's titill lustre shone upon the field around,
Slowly, with the peerless Karna proud Darvodhan left the ground

Pandu's sons with warlike Drona marked the darksome close of day,
And with Kripa and with Bhishma homeward silent bent their way

"Arjun is the gallant victor !" "Valiant Karna's won the day !"
"Prince Darvodhan is the winner !" Various thus the people say.

By some secret sign apprised Partha knew her gallant boy,
Saw him crowned king of Ansa with a mother's secret joy,

And with greater joy Darvodhan fastened Karna to his side, Feared no longer Arjun's prowess, Arjun's skill of arms and pride.

Even Yudhishthira reckoned Karna mightiest warrior on the earth, Halt misdoubted Arjun's prowess, Arjun's skill and warlike worth

SWAYAMVARA

(The Bride's Choice)

The mutual jealousies of the princes increased from day to day, and when Yudhishtira, the eldest of all the princes and the eldest son of the late king Panda, was recognised heir-apparent, the anger of Duryodhana and his brothers knew no bounds. And they formed a dark scheme to kill the sons of Panda.

The sons of Panda were induced with their mother to pay a visit to a distant town called Varanavata. A house had been built there for their residence, constructed of inflammable materials. At the appointed time fire was set to the house; but the five brothers and their mother escaped the conflagration through a subterranean passage, retired into forests, and lived in the disguise of Brahmans.

In course of time they heard of the approaching celebration of the marriage of the princess of Panchala, an ancient kingdom in the vicinity of modern Kanauj. All the monarchs of Northern India were invited, and the bride would choose her husband from among the assembled kings according to the ancient Swayamvara custom. The five sons of Panda decided to go and witness the ceremony.

The portion translated in this Book forms Sections clxxxiv. to clxxxix. of Book 1. of the original text.

JOURNEY TO PANCHALA

Now the righteous sons of Panda, wand'ring far from day to day,
Unto South Panchala's country glad and joyful held their way,

For when travelling with their mother, so it chanced by will of fate,
They were met by pious Brahmans bound for South Panchala's
State,

And the good and holy Brahmins looked the youths of noble fame, Asked them whether they would journey, from what distant land they came,

"From the land of Koschala," good Yudishthir answered so,
 "With our ancient mother travelling as to distant lands we go."

"Hear ye no," the King was astonished, "in Panchala's fair domain,

Drupad, good and glorious monarch, doth a mighty feast ordain,

To that festive land we journey, Drupad's bounteous gifts to share,
 And to see the peerless maid of Panchala's princess fair,

Harsh a mother never bore her, harsh in bosom never fed,
 From the Altar sprang the maiden who some noble prince will wed !

Soft her eyes like lotus petal, sweet her tender pismire form,
 And a maiden's stainless honour doth her gentle soul inform,

And her brother, roiled and armed with his bow and arrows dire, Radiant as the blazing altar, sprang from Sacrificial Fire !

Fair the sister slender waisted, dowered with beauty rich and rare,
 And the fragrance of the lotus, perfumes all the sweetened air,

She will choose from noble suitors gathered from the west and east, Boon and fair shall be the wedding, rich and bounteous be the feast !

Kings will come from distant regions sacrificing wealth and gold, Stainless monarchs versed in grace & pious hearted, mighty-souled.

Handsome youths and noble princes from each near and distant land,

On borne chieftains bold and stalful, brave of heart and stout of hand !

And to win the peerless princess they will scatter presents rare, Food and milk-kine, wealth and jewels, gold and gifts and garments fair,

Noble suits we take as Brahmans, bless the rite with gladsome heart,
Share the feast so rich and bounteous, then with joyful minds depart.

Actors, mimes and tuneful minstrels fair Panchala's court will throng, Famed reciters of puranas, dancers skilled and wrestlers strong,
Come with us, the wedding witness, share the banquet rich and rare, Pleased with gifts and noble presents to your distant home repair.

Dowered ye are with princely beauty, like the radiant gods above,
Even on you the partial princess may surrender heart and love,

And this youth so tall and stalwart, mighty-armed, strong and bold,
He may win in feats of valour rich renown and wealth untold!"

"Be it so," Yudhishthira answered, "to Panchala we repair, View the wedding of the princess and the royal bounty share."

And the righteous sons of Pandu with the Brahmans took their way, Where in South Panchala's kingdom mighty Drupad held his sway.

Now it tell, the saintly sage, deathless bard of deathless lay,
Herald of the holy Vedas, Vyasa stood before their way,

And the princes bowed unto him and received his blessings kind,
By his mandate to Panchala went with pleased and joyful mind!

Jangle woods and silver waters round their sylvan pathway lay,
Halting at each wayside station marched the princes day by day,

Stainless and intent on sorrow, fair in speech and pure in heart,
Travelling slow they reached Panchala, saw its spacious town and mart,

Saw the fort, bazaar and city, saw the spire and shining dome,
In a potter's distant cottage made their humble abode own home,

And disdained a poor Brahman's sons of Panda begged then to do,
People knew not Kuru's prince in that dwelling poor and rude.

THE WEDDING ASSEMBLY

To the beloved son of Panda, Arjan pride of Kuru's race, Drupad longed to give his daughter peerless in her maiden grace,

And of massive wood unbending, Drupad made a stubborn bow, Saying: "Arjan prince of children might not bend the weapon bow,

And he made a whirling disc, hung it 'neath the open sky,
And beyond the whirling disc is placed a target far and high,

"Whoso strings this bow," said Drupad, "hits the target in his pride,

Through the high and circling disc, wins Panchala's prince's bride!"

And they spake the monarch's mandate in the kingdoms near and far,

And from every town and country princes came and chiefs of

Came the pure and saintly rishis too to bless the holy rite,

Came the Kurus with brave Kuru in their pride and matchless
might,

Brahmans came from distant regions with their sacred learning blest,

Drupad with a royal welcome greeted every honoured guest.

Now the festal day approacheth! Gathering men with ocean's voice,

Filled the wide and circling stages to behold the maiden's choice

Royal guests and princely sutors came in pomp of wealth and
pride,

Car-borne chiefs and mailed warriors came to win the beauteous bride!

North-east of the festive city they enclosed a level ground, Towering dome and stately palace cunning builders built around,
And by moat and wall surrounded, pierced by gate and arched door,

By a canopy of splendour was the red field covered o'er !

Now the festal day approacheth ! Sacred censers fragrance lent, Sprinkled chandan spread its coolness, wreaths were hung of sweetest scent,

All around were swan-white mansions, lofty domes and turrets,
high,

Like the peaks of white Kailasa cleaving through the azure sky !

Sparkling gems the chambers lighted, golden nets the windows laced, Spacious stairs so wide and lofty were with beauteous carpets graced,

Rich festoons and graceful garlands gently waved like streamers gay,

And the swan-like silver mansions glinted in the light of day !

Now the festal day approacheth ! High the royal chambers lay,
With their lofty gilded turrets like the peaks of Himalay,

In these halls in pride and splendour dwelt each rich and royal guest,

Fired by mutual emulation, and in costly jewels drest,

Decked and perfumed sat these rulers, mighty-arméd, rich in fame,
Lion-monarchs, noble-destined, chiefs of pure and spotless name,

Pious to the mighty BRAHMA, and their subjects' hope and stay, Loved of all for noble actions, kind and virtuous in their sway.

Now the festal day approacheth ! like the heaving of the main,
Surge the ranks of gathered nations o'er the wide and spacious plain,

Pandu's sons in guise of Brahmans mix with Brahmans versed in lore,

Mark proud Drupad's wealth and splendour, gazing, wondering evermore,

Dances and the gathered people, singers and actors play,
 Enter and the brave splendour greet the concourse rich and gay.

THE BRIDE

Sound the drum and voice the dhruva! Brightly dawns the bridal day,
 The bhron, morning's pure ablutions come the bride in garments gay,

And her golden bridal garland carrying on her graceful arm,
 Softly, sweetly, steps Draupadi, queen of every winning charm.

Then a Brahman versed in vedas, ancient priest of lunar race, Lights the fire, with pious offerings seeds its blessings and its grace,

Whispered words of benediction saints and holy men repeat, Couch and trumpet's voice is silent, hushed the lofty war drum's beat,

And there reigns a solemn silence, and in stately pomp and pride, Draupadi's son leads forth his sister, and Panchaji's beauteous bride.

In his loud and lofty accents like the distant thunder's sound, Draupadi's son his father's wishes thus proclaims to all around:

"*At the dawn, when the sun rises, and the day is young and bright,
 I, my son, will go forth and seek the bride for my dear child,*

Whom, my dear son, I have seen, and the day is bright and clear, Let her stand and be my wife, for Draupadi's heart is true and true."

Then he turns unto Draupadi, tells each prince and suitor's name, Tells his race and lofty lineage, and his valiant deeds of fame.

THE SENIORS

"Brave Duryodhan and his brothers, princes of the Kauravas, Karn proud and peerless archer, seek the noble hand,

And Gandhara's warlike princes, Bhoja's monarch true and bold,
And the son of mighty Drona, all bedecked in gems and gold !

King and prince from Matsya kingdom grace this noble wedding-feast,
Monarchs from more distant regions north and south and west and east,

Te - alpta and Kalinga on the eastern ocean wave, Patan's port whose hardy children western ocean's dangers brave !

From the distant land of Madia car-borne monarch Salva came,
And from Dwarka's sea girt regions Valadeva known to fame,

Valadeva and his brother Krishna sprang from Yadu's race,
Of the Vrishni clan descended, soul of truth and righteous grace !

This is mighty Jayadratha come from Sindhu's sounding shore, Famed for warlike feats of valour, famed alike for sacred lore,

This is fair Kosala's monarch whose bright deeds our heralds sing,
From the sturdy soil of Chedi, this is Chedi's peerless king !

This is mighty Jarasandha, come from far Magadha's land,
These are other princely suitors, sister ! eager for thy hand,

All the wide earth's warlike rulers seek to shoot the distant aim, Princess, whoso hits the target, choose as thine that prince of fame !"

Decked with jewels, young and valiant, all aflame with soft desire, Conscious of their worth and valour, all the suitors rose in ire,

Nobly born, of lofty presence, full of young unyielding pride,
Like the tusked wild and lordly on Himalay's wooded side !

Each his rival marks as foeman as in field of deadly strife,
Each regards the fair Draupadi as his own his queenly wife,

On the gorgeous field they gather by a maddening passion fired,
And they strive as strove the bright gods, when by Uma's love inspired !

And the gods in cloud borne chariots came to view the scene so fair,
 Bright Amryas in their splendour, Maruts in the moving air, Winged Apsaras, sady Nagas, saints celestial pure and high,
 For their music famed, Gandharvas, fair Apsaras of the sky !
 Valadeva armed with plow and share, Krishna chief of righteous
 fame,
 With the other Yadu chieftains to that wondrous bridal came,
 Krishna marked the sons of Pandu eager for the maiden queen,
 Like wild tuskers to a lotus, like the fire that lurks unseen,
 And he knew the warlike brothers in their holy Brahman guise, Pointed them to Valadeva, gazing with a glad surprise !
 But the other chiefs and monarchs with their eyes upon the bride, Marked nor knew the sons of Pandu sitting speechless by their side,
 And the long-armed sons of Pandu smitten by KANDARPA'S dart, Looked on her with longing languor and with love impassioned heart !
 Bright Immortals gaily crowding viewed the scene surpassing far,
 Heavenly blossoms soft descending with a perfume filled the air,
 Bright celestial cars in concourse sailed upon the cloudless sky, Drum and flute and harp and rabor sounded deep and sounded high !

TRIAL OF SKILL

Uprose one by one the suitors, marking still the distant aim, Mighty monarchs, gallant princes, chiefs of proud and warlike
 fame,
 Decked in golden crown and necklace, and inflamed by pride and love,
 Stoutly strove the eager suitors viewing well the target above,

Strove to string the weapon vainly, tough unbending was the bow, Slightly bent, rebounding quickly, laid the gallant princes low !

Strove the handsome suitors vainly, decked in gem and burnished gold,

Rift of diadem and necklace, fell each chief and warrior bold,

Rift of golden crown and garland, shamed and humbled in their
pride,

Groaned the suitors in their anguish, sought no more Panchala's bride !

Uprose Karna, peerless archer, proudest of the archers he,
And he went and strung the weapon, fixed the arrows gallantly,

Stood like SURYA in his splendour and like AGNI in his flame,— Panda's sons in terror whispered, Karna sure must hit the aim !

But in proud and queenly accents Drupad's queenly daughter said :
"Monarch's daughter, born a Kshatra, Suta's son I will not wed," Karna heard with crimsoned forehead, left the emprise almost done,

Left the bow already circled, silent gazed upon the Sun !

Uprose Chedi's haughty monarch, mightiest of the monarchs he,
Other kings had failed inglorious, Sisupala stood forth free,

Firm in heart and fixed in purpose, bent the tough unbending bow, Vainly ! for the bow rebounding laid the haughty monarch low !

Uprose sturdy Jarasandha, fair Magadha's mighty chief,
Held the bow and stood undaunted, tall and stately as a cliff,

But once more the bow rebounded, fell the monarch in his shame,
Left in haste Panchala's mansions for the region whence he came !

Uprose Salva, king of Madra, with his wondrous skill and might, Faltering, on his knees descending, fell in sad inglorious plight,

Thus each monarch fell and faltered, merry whispers went around,
And the sound of stifled laughter circled round the festive ground !

THE DEEDS OF ARJUN

He led the men, sound of his harp, he led each one in his own way,
 Arjuna, the son of Pandu, the ripe robes of Brahmins on,
 Graced as pure as cream and holy, fair as Indra's rainbow bright,
 All the Brahmins stood in admiration, cheered him to their hearts' delight !

So, there were vast sad caravans—heard the sound of groans and
 And their hearts were strangely anxious, whispered murmurs, their fear :

Would he, the boy, what Sisyphus, or by Silva could not stand,
 Would he need for prove's strive to bend and strive in vain,
 Could a Brahmin weak by nature, and in warlike arms armed,
 Would the bow which crowned monarchs, be armed with it—have it so made !

So, the Brahmin boy in that, does a foolish thoughtless deed,
 And amidst this throng of monarchs shame will be our only need,
 So, in a youthful place of madness, with a foolish enterprise done,
 So, the boy would step to his loss and the Brahmin's honor spare !”

“Shame he will not bring untous,” other Brahmins made reply, “Rather, in this place of monarchs, rich in men and honor :

Like a tiger strong and steady, like Himalaya's towering crest Stand unmoved the youthful Brahmin, ample should red, deep chest,

For like his cart is axle, and determined is his way,
 Thou wilt be down on pride who hath folly will to day !

He will do the rest of valor, will not bring disgrace and shame,
 Not is risk in this wide earth which a Brahmin takes to Flow, ye winds, best on wild hunt, in the strength of summer storm, Sweep in foam, in sport mightier than the mightiest warlike throng!

Not even it is right or foolish when a Brahman tries his fate,
But leads to woe or glory, fatal fall or fortune great,

See of Yama Jamadagni, buffed kings and chieftains high,
And Agastya standless Yama drained the boundless ocean dry,

Let this young and daring Brahman undertake the warlike deed, Let him try and by his prowess win the victor's noble meed!"

While the Brahman's deep revolving hopes and timid fears expressed,
By the bow the youthful Arjun stood unmoved like mountain crest,

Stent round the wondrous weapon twice the mighty warrior went,
To the God of Gods, ISANA, in a silent prayer he bent,

Then the bow which gathered warriors vainly tried to bend and strain,
And the monarchs of the wide earth sought to string and wield in vain,

Godlike Arjun born of INDRA, filled with VISHNU's matchless
might,
Bent the wondrous bow of Drupad, fixed the shining darts aught, Though the disc the shining arrows fly with strange and hissing sound,
Hit and pierce the distant target, bring it thundering on the ground!

Shouts of joy and loud applauses did the mighty feat declare,
Heavenly blossoms soft descended, heavenly music thrilled the air,

And the Brahman's shook their deerskins, but each irritated chief,
In a lowly muttered whisper spake his rising rage and grief,

Arjuna's note and voice of trumpet Arjun's glorious deed prolong, Bards and heralds chant his praises in a proud and deathless song!

Leave the priestling in his toly snoring through a Brahman's greed,
 For we were no war with Brahmans and forgive a foolish deed,
 Much we owe to holy Brahmans for our realm and wealth and life,
 Blood of priest or wise preceptor shall not stain our noble stuff,
 In the blood of sinful Drupad we the righteous laws maintain,
 Such disgrace in future ages monarchs shall not meet again!"

Spake the sutors, tiger-hearted, iron-handed, bold and strong, Fiercely bent on blood and vengeance blindly rose the maddened throng,

On they came, the angry monarchs, armed for cruel vengetul strife,
 Drupad midst the holy Brahmans trembling fled for fear of life,
 Like wild elephants of jungle rushed the kings upon their foes,
 Calm and stately, stalwart Bhima and the gallant Arjun rose!

With a wider rage the monarchs viewed these brothers cross their path,
 Rushed upon the daring warriors for to slay them in their wrath, Weaponless was noble Bhima, but in strength like lightning's brand,
 Tore a tree with peerless prowess, shook it as a mighty wand!

And the foe-compelling warrior held that mass of living wood,
 Strong as Death with deadly weapon, facing all his foes he stood,
 Arjun too with godlike valour stood unmoved, his bow in hand,
 Side by side the dauntless brothers faced the fierce and fiery band!

KRISHNA TO THE RESCUE

Krishna knew the sons of Panda though in robes of Brahmans dressed,
 To his elder, Valadeva, thus his inner thought is expressed:

"Mark the great strength of low and high, and I will soon" loudly boast,
He is belied and wronged, Arjun! greater warrior midst the great,

Man of his race, with me approved low he meets the seat of hand, Sive the great warrior Bhishma none can claim such strength of hand!

And the youth with eyes like lotus, he who left the court awhile,
He is proud-souled Yudhishtira, none without a sin or guile,

And the others by Yudhishtira, Pandu's twin-born sons are they,
With these sons the righteous Pitha 'scaped' where death and dread lay,

For the jealous, fierce Duryodhan darkly schemed their death by fire,

But the righteous sons of Pandu 'scaped his unrelenting ire!"

Krishna too amidst the monarchs, strove the tumult to appease,
And unto the angry saviors spake in words of righteous peace,

Monarchs bowed to Krishna's mandate, left Panchala's festive land, Arjun took the beautiful princess, gently led her by the hand.

(The Imperial Sacrifice)

A curious incident followed the bridal of Draupadi. The five sons of Pandu returned with her to the potter's house, where they were living on alms according to the custom of Brahmans, and the brothers reported to their mother that they had received a great gift on that day. "Enjoy ye the gift in common," replied their mother, not knowing what it was. And as a mother's mandate cannot be disregarded, Draupadi became the common wife of the five brothers.

The real significance of this strange legend is unknown. The custom of brothers marrying a common wife prevails to this day in Tibet and among the hill-tribes of the Himalayas, but it never prevailed among the Aryan Hindus of India. It is distinctly prohibited in their laws and institutes, and finds no sanction in their literature, ancient or modern. The legend in the Maha-bharata, of brothers marrying a wife in common, stands alone and without a parallel in Hindu traditions and literature.

Judging from the main incidents of the Epic, Draupadi might rather be regarded as the wife of the eldest brother Yudhishtir. Bhishma had already mated himself to a female in a forest, by whom he had a son, Ghatotkacha, who distinguished himself in war later on. Arjuna too married the sister of Krishna, shortly after Draupadi's bridal, and had by her a son, Abhimanyu, who was one of the heroes of the war. On the other hand, Yudhishtir took to himself no wife save Draupadi, and she was crowned with Yudhishtir in the Rajasuya or Imperial Sacrifice. Notwithstanding the legend, therefore, Draupadi might be regarded as wedded to Yudhishtir, though won by the skill of Arjuna, and this assumption would be in keeping with Hindu customs and laws, ancient and modern.

The king, Duryodhan, heard that his contrivance to kill his enemy at Vaisampaty had failed. He also heard that they had received a powerful friend in Drupid, and had formed an alliance with him. It was no longer possible to keep them from their revengeful intentions. The Kuru kingdom was accordingly partitioned, Duryodhan retained the eastern and richer portion with its ancient capital Hastinapura on the Ganges; and the sons of Pandu were given the western portion on the Jumna, which was then a forest and a wilderness. The sons of Pandu cleared the forest and built a new capital Indraprastha, the supposed ruins of which, near modern Delhi, are still pointed out to the curious traveller.

Yudhishtira, the eldest of the five sons of Pandu, and now ruler of Indraprastha, resolved to perform the Rajasuya sacrifice, which was a formal assumption of the Imperial title over all the princes of ancient India. His brothers went out with troops in all directions to proclaim his supremacy over all surrounding kings. Dussandana, the powerful and semi-civilised king of Magadha or South Behar, opposed and was killed; but other monarchs recognised the supremacy of Yudhishtira and came to the sacrifice with tributes. King Dhritarashtra and his sons, now reigning at Hastinapura, were politely invited to take a share in the performance of the sacrifice.

The portion translated in this Book forms Sections XXV to XXXII, and Section XXXIII of Book II. of the original.

THE ASSEMBLAGE OF KINGS

Ancient halls of proud Hastina mirrored bright on Ganga's wave, Thither came the son of Pandu, young Nakula true and brave,

Came to ask Hastina's monarch, chief of Kuru's royal race,
 To partake Yudhishtira's banquet and his sacrifice to grace.

Dhritarashtra came in gladness unto Indra prastha's town, Marked its new built tower and turret on the azure Jumna brown,

With him came princes of Kupa, and the ancient Bhishma and Elders of the race of Kuru, priests and Brahmins bowed to turn Monarchs came from distant regions to partake the holy rite, Warlike chiefs from court and castle in their arms accoutred bright,

Kshattras came with ample tribute for the holy sacrifice,
 Precious gems and costly jewels, gold and gifts of untold price.

Proud Duryodhan and his brothers came in fair and friendly guise,
 With the ancient Kuru monarch and Vidura good and wise,

With his son came brave Suvala from Gandhara's distant land, Car-borne Salva, peerless Karna, came with bow and spear and brand.

Came the priest and proud preceptor Drona skilled in arms and lore,
 Jayadratha famed for valour came from Sindhu's sounding shore,

Drupad came with gallant princes from Panchala's land of fame, Salwa lord of outer nations to the mighty gathering came.

Bhagadatta came in chariot from the land of nations brave, Prag-jyotisha, where the red sun wakes on Brahma-putra's wave,

With him came untutored Mlechchas who beside the ocean dwell, Uncouth chiefs of dusky nations from the lands where mountains swell.

Came Virata, Matsya's monarch, and his warlike sons and bold, Sisupala, king of Chedi, with his son bedecked in gold.

Came the warlike chiefs of Vishni from the shores of Western Sea,
 And the lords of Madhva-desa, ever warlike ever free !

FEAST AND SACRIFICE

Yamuna's dark and limpid waters laved Yudhishtir's palace walls,
 And to hail him Dharma-raja, monarchs thronged his royal halls,

He to honoured kings and chieftains with a royal grace assigned,
 Palaces with sparkling waters and with trees umbrageous lined,

Proud Dadasaen in his beauty spread the rich and sumptuous feast, Drona's son with due devotion greeted saint and holy priest,

So day with a regal host he welcomed king and chief of might,
His kins and the pious Drona watched the sacrificial rite,

Krupa's hoarded wealth and treasure, gold and gems of untold price,
And with present gifts the Brahmans sanctified the sacrifice,

Drona'sashtra, old and sightless, through the scene of gladness strayed,

With a costly hand Vidura all the mortally cost defrayed,

Proud Devodhan took the tribute which the chiefs and monarchs paid,

Pious Kunti ne unto Brahmans honour and oblation made.

It was a gathering rare and wondrous on fair Jumna's sacred shore,
Tributes of a thousand and of every willing monarch bore,

Costly gifts proclaimed the homage of each prince of warrior
might,

Chattans vied with rival chieftains to assist the holy rite.

That brilliant world, robed in sunlight, sailed across the liquid sky,
And near gleaming cloud-borne chariots rested on the towers high,

Of men, of gods, of Brahmans, filled the halls bedecked in gold,
Of robed priests—deft in and of—manned with the chieftains bold.

And in this scene of splendour, pure-hearted, pure and good,
Like the mass of VASTRA, the soaked Yadashthir stood,

Six bright fires Yadashthir lighted, offerings made to gods above, Gifts unto the priest and lay, spoke the monarch's boundless love.

Hungry men were fed and reasted with an ample feast of rice,
Costly gifts to holy Brahmans graced the noble sacrifice,

And the and of pleased the "Shining Ones" on high,
For man pleased with costly presents, rich their blessings filled the sky!

GLIMPSES OF THE TRUTH

Dazzled by the dawn of a new, good, unvarnished, unclouded path, Crowded throngs had fanned by the breeze crowded on Yudhishtira's path,

And as God himself revealed the way in Brahma's mansion
 In life,

His exalted and noble monarchs gazed the inner sacred site

Where dwelt that truth and virtue, great than power and their power,

And in converse steeped and keened Brahmins passed the radiant hour,

And on abjects' merit and sacred, oft divided in their thought,
 Various sages in their wisdom various diverse maxims taught,

Whether reasons seemed the stronger, whether's reason often far
 Is in disputant like the tale on tell on view, then rivals held

Some were versed in Law of Day, some the Holy Vows professed,

Some with gloom and varied comment still his learned rival pressed.

In that the core of the Brahmins unto sacred learning given For the concourse of the bright was in the glorious vault of heaven,

None of impure caste and conduct there passed on the holy site,

None of impure life and manners stained Yudhishtira's sacred

Dharma's sacred Nand, looked the celestial one,

Smiling by his lister good Yudhishtira's head in

And a ray of heavenly wisdom from the Lord's inner eye,

He saw the gathered monarchs in the concourse pressed and
 high!

He had heard the lips of the heavenly sages' words,

And these faces were gods in state, persons of God himself,

And he saw in them embodied beings of the upper sky,
And in lotus-eyed Krishna saw the Highest of the High !

Saw the ancient World's Preserver, great Creation's Primal Cause,
Who had sent the gods as monarchs to uphold his righteous laws,
Battle for the cause of virtue, perish in a deadly war.
Then to seek their upper mansions in the radiant realms afar !

NARAYANA, World's Preserver, sent immortal gods on earth,
He himself in race of Yadu hath assumed his mortal birth,

Like the moon among the planets born in Vrishni's noble clan,
He whom bright gods tender worship,—NARAYANA, Son of Man, Primal Cause and Self-created ! when is done his purpose high,
NARAYANA leads Immortals to their dwelling in the sky."

Such bright glimpses of the Secret flashed upon his inner sight,
As in lofty contemplation Narad gazed upon the rite.

THE ARGHYA

O spake Bhishma to Yudhishtir : "Monarch of this wide domain, Honour due to crownéd monarchs doth our sacred law ordain,

First to the wide Preceptor, to the Kinsman and to Priest,
To the Friend and to the Scholar, to the King as lord of feast,

But to these is due the arghya, so our holy writs have said,
Therefore to these kings assembled be the highest honour paid,

Noble are these crownéd monarchs, radiant like the noonday sun,
To the noblest, first in virtue, be the foremost honour done !"

"Who is noblest," quoth Yudhishtir, "in this galaxy of fame, Who of chiefs and crownéd monarchs doth our foremost honour claim ?"

Pondering, spake the ancient Bhishma in his accents deep and clear :
"Greatest midst the great is Krishna ! chief of men without a peer !

May the gods, the great sages, great souldiers and most Excellent amongst them Krishna and the phatana the dev,
 Some such things are wanted to void me by the son's returning rage,
 And I will not be voided to the very end of my days.
 Even so this, my dear, is the sacred duty,
 Owe it to honour and splendour unto Krishna's holy night!"

The king rose and Shaldeva saved his mandate quick as thought,
 And the king's duty to voided to the very end of his days, Krishna named in rules of virtue then the other day took,
 Dashed his sword's point at his name in men of blood,
 To Yama's son and to his father, the claret his name in blood,
 To the great and good Krishna, Sisupala's wrathful eyes

SISUPALA'S PRIDE

Not to Yama's son and to his father, the claret his name in blood,
 To the great and good Krishna, Sisupala's wrathful eyes
 arrayed,

He knew the good Yama's son, loved Pandu's noble sons,
 He knew to in uncrowned chieftain, to the lowly Pandu's son

Pandu's sons are yet untamed, and with knowledge yet unlearned, Known to Pandu's son and with wisdom both the rules of law transgressed,

Learned in the Law's of Dharma he hath shed from partial love, Conquered and crushed of sorrow and of our deepest need

In this throng of crowned monarchs, who shall be of more
 fame,

Can this uncrowned Vrishni chieftain far most noble and claim?

Doth he as a king and clear claim the homage to him due?
 Sure his father Vrishni hath his claim's before his son

Doth he as Yudhishthira's kinsman count as foremost and the best ?
 Bead Drupad by alliance surely might the claim contest !

Doth he as a wise preceptor claim the highest, foremost place,
 When the great preceptor Drona doth his royal mansion grace ?

Unto Krishna as a sage should the foremost rank be given ?
 Surely Vyasa claims the honour, Vedic bard inspired by Heaven !

Unto Krishna should we tender honour for his warlike fame ?
 Lo, O Bhishma ! Death's Sabdaer, surely might precedence claim !

Unto Krishna for his knowledge should the noble prize we yield ?
 Drona's son unmatched in learning surely might contest the field !

Great Duryodhan midst the princes stands alone without a peer,
 Kapa priest of royal Kurus, holiest of all priests is here !

Acher Karna - braver archer none there is of mortal birth Learnt his arms from Par'su Rama, he who slew the kings of earth !

Wherefore then to unknown Krishna tender we this homage free ?
 Simply priest, nor wise preceptor, king nor foremost chief is he !"

SISUPALA'S FALL

Fiercely-hearted Sisupala spake in anger stern and high, Came unto him Krishna answered, but a light was in his eye :

" Hast O chiefs and righteous monarchs ! from a daughter of our race

Fall destined Sisupala doth his noble lineage trace,

Sate of wrong and frequent outrage, spite of insult often flung,
 Never in his heart hath Krishna sought to do his kinsman wrong !

Once I went to eastern regions, Sisupala like a foe, Brought my far-famed seaport Dwarka, laid the mart and temple low,

Once on the banks of the Yamuna, Sisupala fell, Slew his men and then a captive in his castle's dungeon cell.

Once on the banks of the Yamuna, Krishna sent his steed, Sisupala rode the charger, sought to stop the murderous deed.

Once on the banks of the Yamuna, proud-hearted, pure and just, Sisupala fell from his horse, forced the fall, to his last.

Once Krishna's two young princesses went to seek for his sister-in-law,
He who would have a bride, seized Sisupala, eloped the bride,

That had more than Krishna's word, for his mother is our ear
But the sickening tale appalleth, and he addeth sin to sin!

One more tale of sin I mention: by his impious passion fired,
To my lady's wife, Rukmini, Sisupala hath aspired,

As the low-born seeks the high, soiling it with impure breath,
Sisupala sought to consort, and his righteous doom is death!

Krishna spake, the rising red blood speaks each angry hero's
Shame,

Shame for Chedi's impious actions, guilt for Sisupala's fancy!

Loudly laughed and proud Sisupala, spake with bitter taunt and jeer, Answered Krishna's reverence with disdain and cruel sneer.

"What atone in this vain assembly, thus proclaim thy tale of
If thy wedded consort and consort did inspire my wealthy thrall?

Doth a man of mine and honour, first with wisdom and with pride,

Thus proclaim his wedded consort was another's loving bride?

Do thy worst! Or if by anger or by weak forbearance led,
Sisupala seeks no more, nor doth Krishna's anger dread!

Lowered Krishna's eye and forehead, and up to his hands took Fatal disc, the dread of sinners, disc that never missed its aim.

"Monarchs in this hall assembled!" Krishna in his anger cried.

"On both Chedi's impious no arch Krishna's noble rage did

For unto his promise, which he had vowed to him, Krishna, Sisupala's hundred robes would by Krishna be forgiven.

I have kept the plighted promise, but must not exceed the tale,
And beneath this venereal weapon Sisupala now shall quail !"

Then the bright and whirling discus, as this mandate Krishna said, Fell on papyrus Sisupala, from his body smote his head,

Fell the mighty-armed monarch like a thunder-river rock, Scattered from the peak of mountain by the bolt's resistless shock !

And his soul, be it said to pass on, came forth from its mortal shroud,

Like the radiant sun in splendour from a dark and mantling cloud,

Unto Krishna good and gracious, like a lurid spark at flame, Chastened of its sin and anger, Sisupala's spirit came !

Rain descends in copious torrents, quick the lurid lightnings fly,
And the wide earth feels a tremor, restless thunders shake the sky,

Various feelings sway the monarchs as they stand in hushed amaze,
Mute in those speechless moments on the lifeless warrior gaze !

Some there are who see their weapons, and their nervous fingers shake,

And their lips they bite in anger, and their frames in tremor quake,

Others in their inmost bosom welcome Krishna's righteous deed,
Look on death of Sisupala as a sinner's proper meed,

Others bless the deed of Krishna as they wend their various ways, Kadmanas pure and pious-hearted chant the righteous Krishna's praise !

Sad Yudhishtira, gentle-hearted, thus unto his brothers said :
"Funeral rites and regal honours be performed unto the dead."

Decease his faithful brothers then performed each pious rite, Honours due to Chandra's monarch, to his rank and peerless might,

Sisupala's son they seated in his mighty father's place,
And with robes of gold and hawked him as a great Chandra's race

YUDHISHTHIR AT THE FEAST

Thus removed the nuptial hindrance, now the holy sacrifice, Was performed with joy and splendour and with gifts of gold and rice,

Good Krishna watched herently with his bow and discus and mace,

And Yudhishthira closed the feasting with his kindness and grace.

Brahmans sprinkled holy water on the empire's righteous lord,
All the monarchs made obeisance, spoke in sweet and graceful word :

"Born of race of Vamana ! thou hast spread thy father's fame,
Rising by thy native virtue thou hast won a mightier name.

And this rule unto thy station doth a holier grace instil,
And thy royal grace and kindness all our hope and wish fulfil.

Grant us, king of mighty monarchs, now unto our realms well Emperor o'er earthly rulers, blessings and thy grace bestow !"

Good Yudhishthira to the monarchs parting grace and honours
And unto his dutious brothers thus in loving-kindness said :

"To our feast these noble monarchs came from loyal love the bear,
Far as confines of their kingdoms, with them let our friends part."

And his brothers and his kinsmen dutiously his best obey,
With each parting guest and monarch journey on the homeward way,

Arjun wends with high-souled Drupad, famed for lofty worth and grace,

Dhrishthadyumna with Virata, monarch of the Matsya race.

Bhima on the ancient Bhishma and on Kuru's king doth wait Sabadeva waits on Drona, great in arms, in vatac great,

With Gandhara's warlike monarch brave Nakula holds his way, Other chiefs with other monarchs where their distant kingdoms lay.

Last of all Yudhishtir's kinsman, righteous Krishna fain would
 part,

And unto the good Yudhishtir opens thus his joyful heart :

"Done this glorious rajasya, joy and pride of Kuru's race, Grant, O friend ! to sea girt Dwarka, Krishna now his steps must trace."

"By thy grace and by thy valour," sad Yudhishtir thus replies,
 "By thy presence, noble Krishna, I performed this high emprise,

By thy all subduing glory monarchs bore Yudhishtir's sway,
 Came with gifts and costly presents, came their tributes rich to pay,

Must thou part ? my uttered accents may not bid thee, friend, to go,

In thy absence vain were empire, and this life were full of woe,

Yet thou partest, sinless Krishna, dearest, best beloved friend,
 And to Dwarka's sea-washed mansions Krishna must his footsteps bend !"

Then unto Yudhishtir's mother, pious-hearted Krishna hies,
 And in accents love-inspiring thus to ancient Pritha cries :

"Regal fame and righteous glory crown thy sons, revered dame,
 Joy thee in their peerless prowess, in their holy spotless fame,

May thy sons' success and triumph cheer a widowed mother's heart,

Grant me leave, O noble lady ! for to Dwarka I depart."

From Yudhishtir's queen Draupadi parts the chief with many a tear,

And from Arjun's wife Sabhadra, Krishna's sister ever dear,

Then with rites and due ablutions to the gods are offerings made,
 Priests repeat their benedictions, for the righteous Krishna said,

And his painted chariot driver banners has taken bannered car,
Like the cloud in his own splendour and resistless in the war.

From Krishna's movement the chariot, fondly greets his friends on ce-shore,
Leaves the river's sacred waters for his Dwarka's dear-love shore.

Still Yudhishthira and his brothers, sad and sore and grieved
part,
Followed Krishna's moving chariot, for they could not see his
part,

Krishna stopped once more his chariot, and his parting files gave, gave,
The great chariot's face of lotus pale in accents carved for

Krishna's chariot's face of lotus pale in accents carved for Krishna's chariot's face of lotus pale in accents carved for

Krishna's chariot's face of lotus pale in accents carved for Krishna's chariot's face of lotus pale in accents carved for

Krishna's chariot's face of lotus pale in accents carved for Krishna's chariot's face of lotus pale in accents carved for

And he and left the car, Krishna, pure and proud, carried Sad Yudhishthira worked his wayward and his heart was rich.

BOOK IV

DYU TA

(The Fatal Dice)

Duryodhan came back from the Imperial Sacrifice filled with jealousy against Yudhishthira, and devised plans to effect his fall. Sakuni, prince of Gandhara, shared Duryodhan's hatred towards the sons of Pandu, and helped him in his dark scheme.

Yudhishthira with all his piety and righteousness had one weakness, the love of gambling, which was one of the besetting sins of the monarchs of the day. Sakuni was an expert at false dice, and challenged Yudhishthira, and Yudhishthira held it a point of honour not to decline such a challenge.

He came from his new capital, Indra prastha, to Hastina-pura, the capital of Duryodhan, with his mother and brothers and Drupada. And as Yudhishthira lost game after game, he was rung with his losses, and with the recklessness of a gambler still went on with the fatal game. His wealth and hoarded gold and jewels, his steeds, elephants and cars, his slaves, male and female, his empire and possessions, were all staked and lost!

The madness increased, and Yudhishthira staked his brothers, and then himself, and then the fair Drupadi, and lost! And thus the Emperor of Indraprastha and his family were deprived of every possession on earth, and became the bond-slaves of Duryodhan. The old king Dhritrashtra released them from actual slavery, but the five brothers retired to forests as homeless exiles.

Portions of Section lvi. and the whole of Sections lvi., lvii., and lviii. of Book II. of the original text have been translated in this Book.

DRAUPADI IN THE COUNCIL HALL

Closed on Ganges' limpid waters brightly shine Hastina's walls!
Queen Draupadi daily mourns and laves within the palace halls,

But as steals a lowly jack in a lordly lion's den, Base Duryodhan's humble menial came to proud Draupadi's ken.

"Pardon, Empress," quoth the menial, "royal Pandu's righteous son,
Lost his name and lost his reason, Empress, thou art staked and won,

Prince Duryodhan claims thee, lady, and the victor bids me say, Thou shalt serve him as his vassal, as his slave in palace stay!"

"Have I heard thee, menial, rightly?" questioned she in anguish keen,

"Doth a crownéd king and husband stake his wife and lose his queen,

Did a noble lord and monarch sense and reason lose at deck,
Other stake he did not waver, wedded wife to sacrifice!"

"Other stakes were daily wagered," so he spake with bitter grief,
"Wealth and empire, every object which Yudhishthir called his own,

Lost himself and all his brothers, bondsmen are those princes be—Then he staked his wife and empress, thou art prince Duryodhan's slave!"

Rose the queen in queenly anger, and with woman's pride she spake:

"Hear thee, menial, to thy master, Queen Draupadi's answer this:

If my lord, himself a bondsman, then hath staked his queen and wife,

Faire the stake, for owns a bondsman neither wealth nor other life,

Slave can wager wife nor children, and such action is undone.
Take my word to prince Duryodhan, Queen Draupadi is undone.

Wrathful was the proud Duryodhan when he heard the words
bold,

To his younger, wild Duhshasan, thus his angry mandate told:

"Little minded is the menial, and his heart in terror fails,
 For the fear of wrathful Bhuma, lo ! his coward-bosom quails, Thou Duhsasan, bid the princess as our humble slave appear, Pandu's sons are humble bondsmen, and thy heart it owns no fear !"

Fierce Duhsasan heard the mandate, blood-shot was his flaming eye,
 Forthwith to the inner chambers did with eager footsteps hie, Proudly sat the fair Draupadi, monarch's daughter, monarch's wife,
 Unto her the base Duhsasan spake the message, insult-rife :

"Lotus-eyed Panchala princess ! fairly staked and won at game, Come and meet thy lord Duryodhan, chase that mantling blush of shame,

Serve us as thy lords and masters, be our beauteous bright-eyed slave,
 Come unto the Council Chamber, wait upon the young and brave !"

Proud Draupadi shakes with tremor at Duhsasan's hateful sight, And she shades her eye and forehead, and her bloodless cheeks are white,

At his words her chaste heart sickens, and with wild averted eye,
 Unto rooms where dwelt the women, Queen Draupadi seeks to fly,

Vainly sped the trembling princess in her fear and in her shame,
 By her streaming wavy tresses fierce Duhsasan held the dame !

Sacred locks ! with holy water dewed at nijastya rite,
 And by mantra consecrated, fragrant, flowing, raven-bright,

Base Duhsasan by those tresses held the faint and flying queen, Feared no more the sons of Pandu, nor their vengeance fierce and keen,

Dragged her in her slipping garments by her long and trailing hair,
 And like suppling tempest-shaken, wept and shook the trembling fair !

stooping in her shame and an old, pale with wrath and woman's fear,
Tossing her and in stable face me, thus she spoke with streaming tear :

“Leave me, shamed as prince Duhshasan ! elders, noble lords are here,
Can a modest wedded woman thus in loose attire appear ?”
At her words and soft entreaty which the weeping princess made,
Vainly to the gods and mortals she in bitter anguish prayed,
For with cruel words of insult still Duhshasan mocked her woe :
“Loose, clad or void of clothing, to the council hall you go, Slave-wench fairly stolen and conquered, wait upon thy masters brave,
Live among our household menials, serve us as our willing slave !”

DRAUPADI'S PLAIN

Loose attire, with trailing tresses, came Draupadi weak and faint, Stood within the Council Chamber, tearful made her piteous plaint :
“Elders ! versed in holy veda, and in every holy rite, Pardon if Draupadi cometh in this sad unseemly plight,
Stay thy sinful deed, Duhshasan, nurseless wrongs and insults spare, Touch me not with hands unclean, sacred is a woman's hair, Honoured elders, righteous nobles, have on me protection give,
Tremble sinner, seek no mercy from the wrathful gods in heaven !
Here in glory, son of Dharma, sits my noble righteous lord, Sin nor shame nor human frailty stains Yudhishtir's deed or
word,
Stent all ? and wilt no chieftain rise to save a woman's life,
Not a hand or voice is lifted to defend a virtuous wife :

Lost is Kuru's righteous glory, lost is Bharat's ancient name,
 Lost is Kshatra's kingly prowess, warlike worth and knightly fame,
 Wherefore else do Kuru warriors tamely view this impious scene, Wherefore glean not righteous weapons to protect an outraged queen ?

Bhishma, hath he lost his virtue, Drona, hath he lost his might,
 Hath the monarch of the Kurus ceased to battle for the right,
 Wherefore are ye mute and voiceless, councillors of mighty fame, Vacant eye and palsied right arm watch this deed of Kuru's shame ?”

INSULT AND VOW OF REVENGE

Spake Draupadi slender-waisted, and her words were stern and
 high,
 Anger flamed within her bosom and the tear was in her eye,
 And her sparkling speaking glances fell on Pandu's sons like fire,
 Stirred in them a mighty passion and a thirst for vengeance dire,
 Lost their empire wealth and fortune, little recked they for the fall,
 But Draupadi's pleading glances like a poniard smote them all !
 Darkly frowned the ancient Bhishma, wrathful Drona bit his tongue,
 Pale Vidura marked with anger insults on Draupadi flung, Falsome word nor foul dishonour could their truthful utterance tant,
 And they cursed Duhshasan's action, when they heard Draupadi's plaint.

But brave Karna, though a warrior,—Arjun's deadly foe was he,— 'Gainst the humbled sons of Pandu spake his scorn in scornful glee :

“Tis no fault of thine, fair princess, fallen to this servile state,
 Wife and son rule not their actions, others rule their hapless fate,

Thy Yudhishthir sold his birthright, sold thee at the impious play,
And the wife falls with the husband, and her duty—to obey !

Live thou in this Kuru household, do the Kuru princes' will, Serve them as thy lords and masters, with thy beauty please them still,

Fair One ! seek another husband who in foolish reckless game,
Will not stake a loving woman, will not cast her forth in shame !

For they censure not a woman, when she is a merdial slave,
If her woman's fancy wanders to the young and to the brave,

For thy lord is not thy husband, as a slave he hath no wife,
Thou art free with truer lover to enjoy a wedded life,

They whom at the samgamana, thou had'st chose, Panchala's bride, They have lost thee, sweet Draupadi, lost their empire and their pride !”

Bhima heard, and quick and fiercely heaved his bosom in his shame,

And his red glance fell on Karna like a tongue of withering flame,

Bound by elder's plighted promise Bhima could not smite in ire,
Looked the painted form of Anger flaming with an anguish dire !

“King and elder !” uttered Bhima, and his words were few and
brave,

“Vain were wrath and righteous passion in the sold and bounden slave,

Would that son of chariot-driver fling on us this insult keen, Hadst thou, noble king and elder, staked not freedom nor our queen ?”

Sad Yudhishthir heard in anguish, bent in shame his lowly head, Proud Duryodhan laughed in triumph, and in scornful accents said :

“Speak, Yudhishthir, for thy brothers own their elder's righteous sway,

Speak, for truth in thee abideth, virtue ever marks thy way,

Hast thou lost thy new-built empire and thy brothers proud and
 • brave,
 Hast thou lost thy fair Draupadi, is thy wedded wife our slave ?”

Lip nor eye did move Yudhishtir, hateful truth might not deny, Karna laughed, but saintly Bhishma wiped his old and manly eye.

Madness seized the proud Duryodhan, and inflamed by passion base,
 Sought the prince to stain Draupadi with a deep and dire disgrace,

On the proud and peerless woman cast his wicked lustful eye,
 Sought to hold the high-born princess as his slave upon his knee !

Bhima penned his wrath no longer, lightning-like his glance he flung,

And the ancient hall of Kurus with his thunder accents rung :

*“May I never reach those mansions where my fathers live on high,
 May I never meet ancestors in the bright and happy sky,*

*If that knee, by which thou sinnest, Bhima breaks not in his ire,
 In the battle's red arena with his weapon, deathful, dire !”*

Red fire flamed on Bhima's forehead, sparkled from his angry eye, As from tough and gnarled branches fast the crackling red sparks fly !

DHRITA-RASHTRA'S KINDNESS

Hark ! within the sacred chamber, where the priests in white attire,
 With libations morn and evening feed the sacrificial fire,

And o'er sacred rights of boma Brahmans chant their mantra high,
 There is heard the jackal's wailing and the raven's ominous cry !

Wise Vidura knew that omen, and the Queen Gandhari knew, Bhishma muttered “svasti ! svasti !” at this portent strange and new,

Drona and preceptor Kripa uttered too that holy word, Spoke her fears the Queen Gandhari to her spouse and royal lord.

Dhritrashtra's head and heart bled with a sudden holy fear,
And his feeble accents quavered, and his eyes were dimmed by tear :

"Son Duryodhan, ever lackless, godless, graceless, witless child, Hast thou Drupad's virtuous daughter thus insulted and reviled, Hast thou counted death and danger, for destruction clouds our
path,
Can an old man's soft entreaties still avert this son of wrath ?"

Slow and gently to Drupad, was the spiteless monarch led,
And in kind and gentle accents unto her the old man said :

"Noblest empress, dearest daughter, good Yudhishtira's stateless wife,

Priest of the Kuru ladies, nearest to my heart and life,

Pardon wrong and cruel insult and avert the wrath of Heaven, Voice thy wish and ask for blessing, be my son's misdeed forgiven !"

Answered him the fair Drupadi : "Monarch of the Kuru's line,
For thy grace and for thy mercy every joy on earth be thine,

Since thou bid'st me name my wishes, 'tis the boon I ask of thee,
That my gracious lord Yudhishtira once again be bond, be free !"

I have borne a child unto him, noble boy and fair and brave,
Be he prince of royal station, not the son of bounden slave,

Let not light unthinking children point to him in utter scorn, Call him slave and dasayutia, of a slave and bondsmen born !"

"Virtuous daughter, have thy wishes," thus the ancient monarch cried,

"Name a second boon and blessing, and it shall be granted."

"Grant me then, O gracious father ! mighty Bhima, Arjun brave, And the youngest twin born brothers, none of them may be a slave,

With their arms and with their chariots let the noble princes part, Freemen let them range the country, strong of hand and stout of
heart !"

Be it so, be it done, let purer bliss" innocent Dhritarashtra cried, Name another boon and blessing, and it shall be gratified,
 "Be content of my queen's daughters, dearest cherished and the best, Keeping it as thy treasure, while now I feel my house is blest!"
 "Not so," answered with the princess, "other boon I may not seek, Thou art boar-headed, and a woman should be modest, wise and meek,
 Hence I stand, red with shame and shamed, and a Kshatriya asks no more,
 From Brahmins it is given, asking thyours evenmore, Now my lord and warrior brothers, from their hateful bondage free'd,
 Seek their fortune by their prowess and be brave and virtuous deed!"

THE BANISHMENT

Now Yudhishthira bent on empire, far from kinsmen, hearth and home,
 With his wife and faithful brothers must as homeless exiles roam, Parting blessings spoke Yudhishthira, "Elder of the Kuru line, Noble grand sire stainless Bhishma, may thy glories ever shine,
 Drona priest and great preceptor, saintly Kripa true and brave, Kuru's monarch Dhritrashtra, may the gods thy empire save,
 Good Vidura true and faithful, may thy virtue serve thee well, Warlike sons of Dhritrashtra, let me bid you all farewell!"
 So he spoke unto his kinsmen, wishing good for evil done,
 And in silence they all listened, parting words they uttered none, Pained at heart with good Vidura, and he asked in sore distress:
 "Noble Pritha, wilt she wander in the pathless wilderness?
 Royal-born, unused to hardship, weak and long unused to roam,
 Aged is the sunthy mother, let the Pritha stay at home,

And by all beloved, respected, in my house shall Pritha dwell, Till your years of exile over, ye shall greet her safe and well."

Answered him the sons of Panda : "Be it even as you say, Unto us thou art a father, we thy sacred will obey,

Give us then thy holy blessings, friend and father, ere we part,
Blessings from the true and righteous brace the feeble, fainting
heart."

Spake Vidura, pious-hearted : "Best of Bharat's ancient race, Let me bless thee and thy brothers, souls of truth and righteous
grace,

Fortune brings no weal to mortals who may win by wicked wile, Sorrow brings no shame to mortals who are free from sin and guile !

Thou art trained in laws of duty, Arjun is unmatched in war,
And on Bhima in the battle kindly shines his faithful star,

And the Twins excel in wisdom, born to rule a mighty State, Fair Draupadi, ever faithful, wins the smiles of fickle Fate !

Each with varied gifts encircled, each beloved of one and all,
Ye shall win a spacious empire, greater, mightier, after fall,

And your exile, good Yudhishtir, is ordained to serve your weal,
Is a trial and samadhi, for it chastens but to heal !

Meru taught thee righteous maxims where Himalay soars above,
And in Varnavata's forest Vyasa taught thee holy love,

Rama preached the laws of duty far on Bhrigu's lofty hill, Sambhu showed the path of virtue by fair Drisad-vati's rill,

Fell from lips of saint Asita, words of wisdom deep and grave, Bhrigu touched with fire thy bosom by the dark Kalmashi's wave

Now once more the teaching cometh, purer, brighter, oftener taught,
Learn the truth from heavenly Narad, happy is thy mortal lot,

Greater than the son of Ila, than the kings of earth in might,
Holier than the holy rishis, be thou in thy virtue bright !

INDRA help thee in thy battles, proud subduer of mankind,
YAMA in the mightier duty, in the conquest of thy mind,
Good KURVERA teach thee kindness, hungry and the poor to feed,
King VARUNA quell thy passions, free thy heart from sin and greed,
Like the Moon in holy lustre, like the Earth in patience deep,
Like the Sun be full of radiance, strong like Wind's resistless sweep !

In thy sorrow, in affliction, ever deeper lessons learn,
Righteous be your life in exile, happy be your safe return,
May these eyes again behold thee in Hastina's ancient town, Conqueror of earthly trials, crowned with virtue's heavenly crown !”

Spoke Vidura to the brothers, and they felt their might increase,
Bowed to him in salutation, filled with deeper, holier peace,
Bowed to Bhishma and to Drona, and to chiefs and elders all,
Exiles to the pathless jungle left their father's ancient hall !

PRITHA'S LAMENT

In the inner palace chambers where the royal ladies dwell, Unto Pritha came Draupadi, came to speak her sad farewell, Monarch's daughter, monarch's consort, as an exile she must go, Pritha wept and in the chambers rose the wailing voice of woe !
Heaving sobs convulsed her bosom as a silent prayer she prayed,
And in accents choked by anguish thus her parting words she said :
“Grieve not, child, if bitter fortune so ordains that we must part, Virtue hath her consolations for the true and loving heart,
And I need not tell thee, daughter, duties of a faithful wife, Drupad's and thy husband's mansions thou hast brightened by thy life !

Nobly from the sinners' Kurus thou hast turned the righteous wrath,
 Surely, with a mother's blessing, tread the trackless jungle path,
 Dangers bring no woe or sorrow to the true and faithful wife,
 Unless deed and holy conduct ever guard her charmed life, Nurture thy lord with woman's love and care, and his brothers, where 't is go,
 Young in years to Saladeva, yet so and unused to woe!"

"May thy blessings help me, mother," so the fair Drupada said,
 "Safe in righteous truth and virtue, forest paths we fearless tread!"

Wet her eyes and bow her knees, yet Drupada bowed and left,
 Ancient Pritha weeps—followed of the noble boy heretofore,
 As she went, her dutious children rove before their mother's eye, Child in garments of the deer skin, and the old maid were bent in shame!

Sorrow weling in her bosom choked her voice and filled her eye,
 Full in broken sobs—scent of tears thus did Pritha cry:

"Never true to path of duty, noble children void of stain,
 True to gods, to mortals faithful, why this undecried pain,
 Wherefore bath untimely sorrow like a darksome cloud above,
 Cast its pale and deathful shadow on the children of my love?
 Woe to me, your wretched mother, woe to her who gave you birth,
 Stainless sons, for sins of Pritha have ye suffered on this earth,
 Shall ye range the pathless forest day and darksome night, Reft of all save native virtue, clad in native, unborn might?
 Woe to me, from rocky mountains where I dwelt by Panda's side,
 When I lost him, to Hastina wherefore came I in my pride,
 Happy is your sainted father, dwells in regions of the sky, Sees nor feels these earthly sorrows—far above us—far and
 high,

Happy too is faithful Madri, for she trod the virtuous way,
Followed Pandu to the bright sky, and is now his joy and stay !

Ye alone are left to Pritha, dear unto her joyless heart, Mother's hope and widow's treasure, and ye may not, shall not part,

Leave me not alone on wide earth, loving sons, your virtues prove,
Dear Draupadi, loving daughter, let a mother's tear-drops move,

Grant me mercy, kind Creator, and my days in mercy close,
End my sorrows, kind VIDHATA, end my life with all my woes !

Help me, pious hearted Krishna, friend of friendless, wipe my pain,

All who suffer pray unto thee and they never pray in vain,

Help me Bhishma, warlike Drona, Kripa ever good and wise,
Ye are friends of truth and virtue, righteous truth ye ever prize,

Help me from thy starry mansions, husband, wherefore dost thou wait,

Seest thou not thy godlike children exiled by a bitter fate !

Part not, leave me not, my children, seek ye not the trackless way,
Stay but one, if one child only, as your mother's hope and stay.

Youngest, gentlest Sahadeva, dearest to this widowed heart,
Will thou watch beside thy mother, while thy cruel brothers part ?”

Whispering words of consolation, Pritha's children wiped her tear, Then unto the pathless jungle turned their footsteps lone and drear !

Kuru dames with fanning Pritha to Vidura's palace hie, Kuru queens for weeping Pritha raise their voice in answering cry,

Kuru maids for fair Draupadi fortune's fitful will upbraid,
And their tear-dewed lotus-faces with their streaming fingers shade,

Dhriti-rashtra, ancient monarch, is by sad musgivings pained,
Questions oft with anxious bosom what the cruel fates ordained.

ĪTIVRATĀ-MĀHATMYA

(Woman's Love)

THAT TOGETHER with the sons of Pandu went with Draupadi to exile, and passed twelve years in the wilderness; and many were the incidents which checkered their forest life. Krishna, who had stood by Yudhishtira in his prosperity, now came to visit him in his adversity, he consoled Draupadi in her distress, and gave good advice to the brothers. Draupadi with a woman's pride and anger still thought of her wrongs and insults, and urged Yudhishtira to disregard the conditions of exile and recover his kingdom. Pandu too was of the same mind, but Yudhishtira would not be moved from his pledged word.

The great ṛṣi Vṛsa came to visit Yudhishtira, and advised Arjun, great archer as he was, to acquire celestial arms by penance and worship. Arjun followed the advice, met the god SIVA in the guise of a hunter, pleased him by his prowess in combat, and obtained his blessings and the pasupati weapon. Arjun then went to INDRA'S heaven and obtained other celestial arms.

In the meanwhile Duryodhan, not content with sending his cousins to exile, wished to humiliate them still more by appearing before them in all his royal power and splendour. Matters, however, turned out differently from what he expected, and he became involved in a quarrel with some gandharvas, a class of aerial beings. Duryodhan was taken captive by them, and it was the Pandava brothers who released him from his captivity, and allowed him to return to his kingdom in peace. This act of generosity rinkled in his bosom and deepened his hatred.

Jayadratha, king of the Sindhu or Indus country, and a friend and ally of Duryodhan, came to the woods, and in the absence of the Pandava brothers carried off Draupadi. The Pandavas, however, pursued the king, chastised him for his misconduct, and rescued Draupadi.

Still more interesting than these various incidents are the tales and legends with which this book is replete. Great saints came to see Yudhishtir in his exile, and narrated to him legends of ancient times and of former kings. One of these beautiful episodes, the tale of Nala and Damayanti, has been translated into graceful English verse by Dean Milman, and is known to many English readers. The legend of Agastya who drained the ocean dry; of Parsu Rama a Brahman who killed the Kshattrivas of the earth; of Bhagiratha who brought down the Ganges from the skies to the earth; of Manu and the universal deluge; of Vishnu and various other gods; of Rama and his deeds which form the subject of the Epic Ramayan; — these and various other legends have been interwoven in the account of the forest-life of the Pandavs, and make it a veritable storehouse of ancient Hindu tales and traditions.

Among these various legends and tales I have selected one which is singular and striking. The great truth proclaimed under the thin guise of an eastern allegory is that a True Woman's Love is not conquered by Death. The story is known by Hindu women, high and low, rich and poor, in all parts of India, and on a certain night in the year millions of Hindu women celebrate a rite in honour of the woman whose love was not conquered by death. Legends like these, though they take away from the unity and conciseness of the Epic, impart a moral instruction to the millions of India the value of which cannot be overestimated.

The portion translated in this Book forms Sections ccxcii. and ccxciii., a part of Section ccxciv. and Sections ccxcv. and ccxcvi. of Book III. of the original text.

FOREST LIFE

In the dark and pathless forest long the Pandav brothers strayed,
In the bosom of the jungle with the fair Draupadi stayed,

And they killed the forest red-deer, hewed the gnarled forest wood,
From the stream she fetched the water, cooled the humble daily food,

In the noon he swept the cottage, in the cheerful morn at eve, But at night in lonesome silence oft her woman's heart would grieve,

Insults rankled in her bosom and her tresses were unbound,
So she vowed, all fitting vengeance had the base insulters found !

Oft when evening's shades descended, mantling o'er the wood and lea,

When Draupadi by the cottage cooked the food beneath the tree,

Rama came to good Yudhishthir, sat beside his evening fires,
Many olden tales recited, legends of our ancient sires.

Manandev, holy rishi, once unto Yudhishthir came,
When his heart was sorrow-laden with the memories of his shame.

"Pardon, father !" said Yudhishthir, "if unbidden tears will start,
But the woes of fair Draupadi grieve a banished husband's heart,

By her tears the saintly woman broke my bondage worse than death,

By my sins she suffers exile and misfortune's freezing breath "

Dost thou, sage and saintly rishi, know of wife or woman born,
By such nameless sorrow smitten, by such strange misfortune torn.

Hast thou in thy ancient legends heard of true and faithful wife,
With a stronger wife's affection, with a sadder woman's life ?"

"Listen, monarch !" said the rishi, "to a tale of ancient date, How Savitri loved and suffered, how she strove and conquered Fate !"

THE TALE OF SAVITRI

In the country of far Madra lived a king in days of old.
Faithful to the holy BRAHMA, pure in heart and righteous souled,

He was loved in town and country, in the court and hermit's den, Sacrificer to the bright gods, helper to his brother men,

But the monarch, Aswapati, son or daughter had he none,
Old in years and sunk in ageish, and his days were almost done !

Now he took and holy penance, and with pious rules conformed,
Spice in diet as ambrosia many sacred rites performed,

Sung the sacred hymn, gatha, to the gods oblations gave,
Through the livelong day he fasted, uncomplaining, meek and
brave.

Year by year he gathered virtue, rose in merit and in might,
Till the goddess of savitri smiled upon his sacred rite,

From the fire upon the altar which a holy radiance flung,
In the form of beauteous maiden, goddess of savitri sprung !

And she spake in gentle accents, blessed the monarch good and
brave,

Blessed his rites and holy penance and a boon unto him gave :

"Penance and thy sacrifices can the Powers Immortal move,
And the pureness of thy conduct doth thy heart's affection prove,

A wishy boon, king Aswapati, from creation's Ancient Sire, True to virtue's sacred mandate speak thy inmost heart's desire."

"For an offspring brave and kingly," so the saintly king replied,
"Holy rites and sacrifices and this penance I have tried,

If these rites and sacrifices move thy favour and thy grace, Grant me offspring, Prayer-Maiden, worthy of my noble race."

"Have thy object," spake the maiden, "Madra's pious-hearted king,
From SWAYAMHUT, Self-created, blessings unto thee I bring,

For HE lists to mortal's prayer springing from a heart like thine,
And HE wills,—a noble daughter grace thy famed and royal line,

Aswapati, glad and grateful, take the blessing which I bring,
Part in joy and part in silence, bow unto Creation's King !"

Vanished then the Prayer-Maiden, and the king of noble fame, Awapati, Lord of coursers, to his royal city came,

Days of hope and night of gladness Madri's happy monarch passed,
 Till his queen of noble offspring gladsome promise gave at last !
 As the moon each night increaseth chasing darksome nightly gloom,
 Grew the unborn babe in splendour in its happy mother's womb,
 And in fulness of the season came a girl with lotus-eye,
 Father's hope and joy of mother, gift of kindly gods on high !
 And the king performed its birth-rites with a glad and grateful mind,
 And the people blessed the dear one with their wishes good and kind,
 As Savitri, Power of Maden, had the beauteous offspring given, Brahma named the child Savitri, holy gift of bounteous Heaven !
 Grew the child in brighter beauty like a goddess from above,
 And each passing season added fresher sweetness, deeper love, Came with youth its lovelier graces, as the buds their life unfold,
 Slender waist and rounded bosom, image as of burnished gold,
Dara-Kama ! born a goddess, so they said in all the land, Princely suitors struck with splendour ventured not to seek her hand.

Once upon a time it happened on a bright and festive day,
 Fresh from bath the beauteous maiden to the altar came to pray,
 And with cakes and pure libations duly fed the Sacred Flame,
 Then like Sri in heavenly radiance to her royal father came.
 And she bowed to him in silence, sacred flowers beside him laid,
 And her hands she folded meekly, sweetly her obeisance made.
 With a father's pride, upon her gazed the ruler of the land,
 But a strain of sadness lingered, for no suitor claimed her hand.

"Dad, Dad," whispered Aswapati, "now, methinks, the time is come,
Thou should'st choose a princely suitor, grace a royal husband's home,

Choose thyself a noble husband worthy of thy noble hand,
Choose a true and upright monarch, pride and glory of his land,

As thou choicest, gentle daughter, in thy loving heart's desire,
Blessed and his free permission will bestow thy happy sire.

For our sacred sastras sanction, holy Brahmans oft relate,
That the day loving father sees his girl in wedded state,

That the day loving husband watches o'er his consort's ways,
That the day loving offspring tends his mother's widowed days,

Therefore choose a loving husband, daughter of my house and love,

So may father cease to censure or from men or gods above."

Then Savitri bowed unto him and for parting blessings played,
Then she left her father's palace and in distant regions strayed,

With her guard and armed courtiers whom her watchful father sent,
Seated on her golden chariot unto sylvan woodlands went.

For in pleasant woods and jungle wandered she from day to day,
Unto ashrams, hermitages, pious-hearted held her way,

Out she staid in holy dharmas washed by sacred limpid streams, Food she gave unto the hungry, wealth beyond their fondest dreams.

Many days and months are over, and it once did so befall,
When the king and queen Narad sat within the royal hall,

From her journey's near and distant and from places known to
fame,

Fair Savitri with the courtiers to her father's palace came,

Came and saw her royal father, with Narad by his seat,
Bent her head in salutation, bowed unto their holy feet.

THE FATED BRIDEGROOM

"Whence comes she," so Narad questioned, "whither was Savitri led,

Where ere to a happy husband hath Savitri not been wed?"

"Nay, to choose her lord and husband," so the virtuous monarch said,

"Fair Savitri long hath wandered and in holy tirthas stayed, Maiden! speak unto the risi, and thy choice and secret tell,"

Then a blush suffused her forehead, soft and slow her accents fell

"Listen, father! Salwa's monarch was of old a king of might, Righteous-hearted Dyanat-sena, feeble now and void of sight.

Joemen robbed him of his kingdom when in age he lost his sight
And from town and spacious empire was the monarch forced to flight,

With his queen and with his infant did the feeble monarch stray,
And the jungle was his palace, darksome was his weary way,

Holy vows assumed the monarch and in penance passed his life, In the wild woods nursed his infant and with wild fruits fed his wife,

Years have gone in rigid penance, and that child is now a youth,
Him I choose my lord and husband, Satyavan, the Soul of Truth.

Thoughtful was the risi Narad, doleful were the words he said
"Sad disaster waits Savitri if this royal youth she wed,

Truth-beloving is his father, truthful is the royal dame,
Truth and virtue rule his actions, Satyavan his sacred name,

Steeds he loved in days of boyhood and to paint them was his art,
Hence they called him young Chitraswa, art-beloving gallant heart.

But, O pious-hearted monarch! fair Savitri hath in sooth, Courtied Fate and sad disaster in that noble gallant youth!"

"Tell me," questioned Aswapati, "for I may not guess thy thought, Wherefore is my daughter's action with a sad disaster fraught,
Is the youth of noble lustre, gifted in the gifts of art, Blest with wisdom and with prowess, patient in his dauntless heart?"

"SURYA's lustre in him shineth," so the rishi Narad said,
"BṚHASPATI's wisdom dwelleth in the youthful prince's head,
Like MAHENDRA in his prowess, and in patience like the Earth, Yet O king! a sad disaster marks the gentle youth from birth!"

"Tell me, rishi, then thy reason," so the anxious monarch cried,
"Why to youth so great and gifted may this maid be not allied,
Is he princely in his bounty, gentle-hearted in his grace, Duly versed in sacred knowledge, fair in mind and fair in face?"

"Free in gifts like Rantideva," so the holy rishi said,
"Versed in lore like monarch Sivi who all ancient monarchs led,

Like YAYATI open hearted and like CHANDRA in his grace,
Like the handsome heavenly ASVINS fair and radiant in his face,

Meek and graced with patient virtue he controls his noble mind,
Modest in his kindly actions, true to friends and ever kind,

And the hermits of the forest praise him for his righteous truth, Nathless, king, thy daughter may not wed this noble hearted youth!"

"Tell me, rishi," said the monarch, "for thy sense from me is hid, Has this prince some fatal blemish, wherefore is this match forbid?"

"Fatal fault!" exclaimed the rishi, "fault that wipeth all his grace, Fault that human power nor effort, rite nor penance can efface,

Fatal fault of destined sorrow! for it is decreed on high,
On this day, a twelve month later, this ill-fated prince will die!"

Shook the startled king in terror and in fear and trembling cried:
"Unto short-lived, fated bridegroom ne'er my child shall be allied,

Could Savitri, dear loved maiden, choose another happier lord,
 King Nand speaketh wisdom, list unto his holy word!

Every grace and every virtue is enaced by cruel Fate,
 On this day, a twelve month later, leaves the prince his mortal state!"

"Father!" answered then the maiden, "it and ad her accents fell,
 "I have read my fate and I am glad, holy Nand counsels well,

*But my fate is not my own, it comes to me as it may,
 On my fate I have no control, I must be patient, not be vain,*

*I will be true to my fate, and I will be true to my love,
 And I will be true to my duty, by my fate and by my love,*

*It is my fate to be true to my love, and it is my fate to be true to my duty,
 And I will be true to my fate, and I will be true to my love!"*

"My arch!" uttered then the god, "fixed is she in mind and heart,
 From her truth the true Savitri never, never will depart,

More than mortal's share of virtue unto Savitri I have given,
 Let the true maid wed her chosen, leave the rest to go to Heaven!"

"Kee! and preceptor holy!" so the weeping monarch prayed,
 "Heaven avert all future evils, and thy mandate is obeyed!"

Nand wished him joy and gladness, blessed the loving young maid,

For so he met their wedding every fervent blessing laid.

OVERTAKEN BY FATE

Twelve month in the darksome forest by her true and chosen lord, Sweet Savitri loved his parents by her thought and deed and
 word,

Bath of the sun and her garments draped upon her bosom fell,
 On the red cloth in marriage holy women love to wear,

And the aged queen she tended with a fond and total pride,
Served the old and sightless monarch like a daughter by his side,

And with love and gentle sweetness pleased her husband and her lord,

But in secret, night and morning, pondered still on Narad's word !

Nearer came the fatal morning by the holy Narad told,
Fair Savitri reckoned daily and her heart was still and cold,

Three short days remaining only ' and she took a vow severe,
Of tristara, three nights' penance, holy fasts and vigils drear.

Of Savitri's rigid penance heard the king with anxious woe,
Spoke to her in loving accents, so the vow she might forego :

"Hard the penance, gentle daughter, and thy woman's limbs are frail,

After three nights' fasts and vigils sure thy tender health may fail."

"Be not anxious, loving father," meekly thus Savitri prayed,

"Penance I have undertaken, will unto the gods be made."

Much misdoubting then the monarch gave his sad and slow assent, Pale with fast and unseen tear-drops, lonesome nights Savitri spent,

Nearer came the fatal morning, and to-morrow he shall die, Dark, lone hours of nightly silence ! Tearless, sleepless is her eye !

"Dawns that dead and fated morning !" said Savitri, bloodless,
brave,

Prayed her fervent prayers in silence, to the Fire oblations gave,

Bowed unto the forest Brahmans, to the parents kind and good,
Joined her hands in salutation and in reverent silence stood.

With the usual morning blessing, "Widow may'st thou never be,"

Anchorites and aged Brahmans blessed Savitri fervently,

O ! that blessing fell upon her like the rain on thirsty air,
Struggling hope inspired her bosom as she drank those accents fair,

But returned the dark remembrance of the risli Narad's word, Pale she watched the creeping sunbeams, mused upon her fated lord !

"Daughter, now thy fast is over," so the loving parents said,
 "Take thy diet after perice, for thy morning prayers are prayed,"

"Pardon, father," said Savitri, "let this other day be done," Unshed tears dropped her eyelids, listened in the morning ear :

Satyavan, sedate and stately, ponderousaxe on shoulder hung,
 For the distant darksome jungle issued forth serene and strong,
 But unto him came Savitri and in sweetest accents prayed,
 As upon his manly bosom, gently she her torchhead laid :

"Long I wished to see the jungle where steals not the solitude, Take me to the darksome forest, husband, let me go to-day."

"Come not, love," he sweetly answered with a loving husband's care,

"Thou art all unaccustomed to labour, forest paths thou may'st not dare,
 And with recent fasts and vigils pale and bloodless is thy face,
 And thy step is weak and feeble, jungle paths thou may'st not trace."

"Fasts and vigils make me stronger," said the wife with wisely pride,
 "Toil I shall not feel nor languor when my lord is by my side,

For I feel a woman's longing with my lord to trace the way,
 Grant me, husband ever gracious, with thee let me go to-day."

Answered then the loving husband, as his hands in hers he wove,
 "Ask permission from my parents in the trackless woods to rove."

Then Savitri to the monarch urged her longing strange request,
 After dateless salutation thus her humble prayer addrest :

"To the jungle goes my husband, fuel and the fruit to seek,
 I would follow if my mother and my loving father speak,

Twelve-month from this narrow way I will Savitri stepped and
 strayed,

In this cottage true and faithful ever hath Savitri stayed,

For the sacred fuel wends my lord his lonesome way,
 Please my kind and loving parent, I would follow him to-day."

"Never since her wedding morning," so the loving king replied,
"Wish or thought Savitri whispered, for a boon or object sighed,

Daughter, thy request is granted, safely in the forest roam, Sately with thy lord and husband seek again thy cottage home."

Bowing to her loving parents did the fair Savitri part,
Smile upon her pallid features, anguish in her inmost heart,

Round her sylvan greenwoods blossomed 'neath a cloudless Indian sky,
Flocks of pea-fowls gorgeous plumed flew before her wondering eye,

Woodland rills and crystal nullahs gently roll'd o'er rocky bed,
Flower-decked hills in dewy brightness towering glittered overhead,

Birds of song and beauteous feather trilled a note in every grove, Sweeter accents fell upon her, from her husband's lips of love!

Still with thoughtful eye Savitri watched her dear and fated lord,
Faint of grief was in her bosom but her pale lips shaped no word,

And she listened to her husband still on anxious thought intent, Cleft in two her throbbing bosom as in silence still she went!

Gaily with the gathered wild fruits did the prince his basket fill,
Hewed the interlaced branches with his might and practised skill,

Till the drops stood on his forehead, weary was his aching head, Faint he came unto Savitri and in faltering accents said:

"Cruel ache is on my forehead, fond and ever faithful wife,
And I feel a hundred needles pierce me and torment my life,

And my feeble footsteps falter and my senses seem to reel, Fain would I beside thee linger for a sleep doth o'er me steal."

With a wild and speechless terror pale Savitri held her lord,
On her lap his head she rested as she laid him on the sward,

Narad's fatal words remembered as she watched her husband's head,
Burning lip and pallid forehead and the dark and creeping shade,

Casped him in his beating bosom, kissed his lips with panting breath,
Darker grew the gloom on his face, and he kept the sleep of death!

TRIUMPH OVER FATE

In the bosom of the shadow rose a Vision dark and dread,
Shape of gloom in murky garment and a crown was on his head,
Greening form of sable splendour, blood-red was his sparkling eye,
And a fatal noose he carried, grim and redlike, dark and high!

And he stood in silent silence, looked in silence on the dead,
And Savitri on the green ward gently placed her husband's head,

And a tremor shook Savitri, but a woman's love is strong,
With her hands upon her husband's head she spoke with quivering tongue:

"More than man art thou, Yama! If a deity thou dost be,
'Tell me what be the name thou bearest, what thy message unto me."

"Know me," thus responded Yama, "mighty monarch of the dead, Mortals leaving earth's mansion to my dirksome realms are led,

Since with woman's full affection thou hast loved thy husband
dear,

Hence before thee, faithful woman, YAMA doth in form appear,

But his day and loves are ended, and he leaves his faithful wife,
In the noose I bind and carry spark of his immortal life,

Virtue graced his life and action, spotless was his princely heart, Hence for him I came in person, princess, let thy husband part."

YAMA took the prince's body, pale and bloodless, cold and dumb, Drew the vital spark, prajna, smaller than the human thumb,

In his noose the spark he fastened, silent went his dirksome way,
Left the body shorn of lustre to its mid cold decay,

Southward went the disenchanted YAM with the youth's immortal
life,

And, for woman's love abideth, followed still the faithful wife.

"Turn Savitri," outspake YAMA, "for thy husband loved and lost,
Do the rites due unto mortals by their Fate predestined cost,

For thy wifely duty ceases, follow not in fruitless woe,
And no farther living creature may with monarch YAMA go!"

"But I may not choose, but follow where thou takest my husband's life,

For Eternal Law divides not loving man and faithful wife,

For a woman's true affection, for a woman's sacred woe,
Grant me in thy godlike mercy farther still with him I go!

Fourfold are our human duties: first to study holy lore,
Then to live as good householders, feed the hungry at our door,

Then to pass our days in penance, last to fix our thoughts above,
But the final goal of virtue, it is Truth and deathless Love!"

"True and holy are thy precepts," listening YAMA made reply,
"And they fill my heart with gladness and with pious purpose high,

I would bless thee, fair Savitri, but the dead come not to life,
Ask for other boon and blessing, faithful true and virtuous wife!"

"Since you so permit me, YAMA," so the good Savitri said,
"For my husband's banished father let my dearest suit be made,

Sightless in the darksome forest dwells the monarch faint and weak,

Grant him sight and grant him vigour, YAMA, in thy mercy speak!"

"Dutious daughter," YAMA answered, "be thy pious wishes given,
And his eyes shall be restored to the cheerful light of heaven,

Turn Savitri, faint and weary, follow not in fruitless woe,
And no farther living creature may with monarch YAMA go!"

"Faint nor weary is Savitri," so the noble princess said,
"Since she waits upon her husband, gracious Monarch of the dead,

What befalls the wedded husband still befalls the faithful wife,
Where he lead she ever follow, be it death or be it life !

And our sacred writ ordureth and our pious manes sing, Transcendeth even the holy death its countless blessings bring,

Longer friendship with the holy purges the mortal birth,
Longer union with the holy is the bright sky on the earth,

Union with the pure and holy is purer than heavenly life,
For Eternal Law divides not lover, man and faithful wife !”

“Blessed are thy word,” said YAMA, “blessed is thy pious thought,
With a higher power wisdom are thy holy lessons fraught,

I would bless thee, fair SAVITRI, but the dead come not to life,
Ask for other boon and I beseech, faithful true and virtuous wife !”

“Since you so permit me, YAMA,” so the good SAVITRI said, “Once more for my husband’s father be my supplication made,

Lost his kingdom, in the forest dwells the monarch faint and weak,
Grant him back his wealth and kingdom, YAMA, in thy mercy speak !”

“Fearing daughter,” YAMA answered, “wealth and kingdom I bestow,

Turn, SAVITRI, leaving mortal man not with King YAMA go !”

Still SAVITRI, meek and faithful, followed her departed lord, YAMA still with higher wisdom listened to her saintly word,

And the Sable King was vanquished, and he turned on her again,
And his words fell on SAVITRI like the cooling summer rain, “Noble woman, speak thy wishes, name thy boon and purpose

high,

What the pious mortal asketh gods in heaven may not deny !”

“Thou hast,” so SAVITRI answered, “granted father’s realm and
might,

To his vain and sightless eyeballs hast restored their blessed sight,

Grant him that the line of monarchs may not all untimely end, Satyavan may see his kingdom to his royal sons descend !”

“Have thy object,” answered YAMA, “and thy lord shall live again,
He shall live to be a father, and his children too shall reign,

For a woman's troth abideth longer than the fleeting breath,
And a woman's love abideth higher than the doom of Death ?”

RETURN HOME

Vanished then the Sable Monarch, and Savitri held her way, Where in dense and darksome forest still her husband lifeless lay,

And she sat upon the greensward by the cold unconscious dead,
On her lap with deeper kindness placed her consort's lifeless head,

And that touch of true affection thrilled him back to waking life,
As returned from distant regions gazed the prince upon his wife,

“Have I lain too long and slumbered, sweet Savitri, faithful spouse,

but I dreamt a Sable Person took me in a fatal noose !”

“Pillowed on this lap,” she answered, “long upon the earth you lay,

And the Sable Person, husband, he hath come and passed away,

Rise and leave this darksome forest if thou feelest light and strong,
For the night is on the jungle and our way is dark and long.”

Rising as from happy slumber looked the young prince on all around,

Saw the wide-extending jungle mantling all the darksome ground,

“Yes,” he said, “I now remember, ever loving faithful dame,
We in search of fruit and fuel to this lonesome forest came,

As I lewed the gnarled branches, cruel anguish filled my brain,
And I laid me on the greensward with a throbbing piercing pain,

Pillowed on thy gentle bosom, solaced by thy gentle love,
I was soothed, and drowsy slumber fell on me from skies above.

All was dark and then I came to see, was it but a fleeting dream,
 God of Vision, dark and uncreated, in the deepening shadows
 I saw.

Was this dream my fair Savitri, dost thou of this Vision know, Tell me, for before my eyesight still the Vision seems to glow !”

“Darkness thickens,” said Savitri, “and the evening waxeth late,
 When the morrow’s light returneth I shall all these scenes narrate.

Now arise, for darkness gathers, deeper grows the gloomy night,
 And thy loving, anxious parent trembling wait thy welcome sight.

Hark the dangers of the forest ! how their voices strike the ear, Prowlers of the darksome jungle how they fill my breast with fear

Forest-fire is rising yonder, for I see a distant gleam,
 And the rising evening breezes help the red and radiant beam,

Let me fetch a burning targot and prepare a friendly light,
 With these fallen withered branches chase the shadows of the night,

And it teebble still thy footsteps, long and weary is our way,
 By the fire repose, my husband, and return by light of day.”

“For my parents, fondly anxious,” Satyavan thus made reply, “Pains my heart and tears my bosom, let us to their cottage hie

When I turned in the jungle or by day or dewy eve, Searching in the hermitages often did my parents grieve,

And with father’s soft reproaches and with mother’s loving fears, Chid me for my tardy footsteps, dewed me with their gentle tears.”

Think then of my father’s sorrow, of my mother’s woeful plight,
 If afar in wood and jungle pass we now the livelong night.

Wife beloved, I may not fathom what mishap or load of care, Unknown dangers, unseen sorrows, even now my parents share.”

Gentle drops of filial sorrow trickled down his manly eye, Fond Savitri sweetly speaking softly wiped the tear drops dry :

• Trust me, husband, if Savitri hath been faithful in her love,
If she hath with pious offerings served the righteous gods above,
If she hath a sister's kindness unto brother men performed,
If she hath in speech and action unto holy truth conformed,
Unknown blessings, mighty gladness, trust thy ever faithful wife,
And not sorrows or disasters wait this eve our parents' life !”

Then she rose and tied her tresses, gently helped her lord to rise, Walked with him the pathless jungle, looked with love into his eyes,

On her neck his clasping left arm sweetly winds in soft embrace,
Round his waist Savitri's right arm doth as sweetly interlace,

Then they walked the darksome jungle, silent stars looked from above,

And the hushed and throbbing midnight watched Savitri's deathless love !

BOOK VI

GO-HARANA

(Cattle Lifting)

The conditions of the banishment of the sons of Pandu were laid. They must pass twelve years in exile, and then they must remain a year in concealment. If they were discovered within this last year, they must go into exile for another twelve years.

Having passed the twelve years of exile in forests, the Pandav brothers disguised themselves and entered into the menial service of Virata, King of the Matsyas, to pass the year of concealment. Yudhishthira presented himself as a Brahman, skilled in dice, and became a counsellor of the king. Bhima entered the king's service as cook. For Arjuna, who was so well known, a stricter concealment was necessary. He wore conch bangles and earrings and hid his hair, like two ignorant idiotic beings whom nature has debarred from the privileges of men and women, and he lived in the inner apartments of the king. He assumed the name of Purochana and taught the inmates of the royal household in music and dancing. Nakula became a keeper of the king's horses, and Sahadeva took charge of the king's cows. Draupadi too disguised herself as a waiting-woman, and served the princess of the Matsya house in that humble capacity.

In these disguises the Pandav brothers safely passed a year of concealment in spite of all search which Duryodhana made for them. At last an incident happened which led to their discovery when the year was out.

Cattle-lifting was a common practice with the kings of ancient India, as with the chiefs of ancient Greece. The king of the Trigattas and the king of the Kurus combined and fell on the king of the Matsyas in order to drive off the numerous herds of fine cattle for which his kingdom was famed. The Trigattas entered the Matsya kingdom from the south east, and while the went out with his troops to meet the foe, Duryodhan with his Kuru forces fell on the kingdom from the north.

When news came that the Kurus had invaded the kingdom, there was no army in the capital to defend it. King Virata had gone out with most of his troops to face the Trigartas in the south-east, and the prince Uttara had no inclination to face the Kurus in the north. The disguised Arjun now came to the rescue in the manner described in this Book. The description of the bows, arrows, and swords of the Pandav brothers which they had concealed in a tree, wrapped like human corpses to frighten away inquisitive travellers, throws some light on the arts and manufactures of ancient times. The portions translated in this Book form Sections xxxv., xxavi., xl. to xlii., a portion of Section xlii. and Sections lli. and lxxii. of Book iv. of the original text.

COMPLAINT OF THE COWHERD

Monarch of the mighty Matsyas, brave Virata known to fame, Marched against Trigarta chieftains who from southward regions came,

From the north the proud Duryodhan, stealing onwards day by day,

Swooped on Matsya's fattened cattle like the hawk upon its prey!

Bhishma, Drona, peerless Karna, led the Kuru warriors brave, Swept the kingdom of Virata like the ocean's surging wave,

Fell upon the trembling cowherds, chased them from the pasture-
field,

Sixty thousand head of cattle was the Matsya country's yield!

And the wailing chief of cowherds fled forlorn fatigued and spent,
Speeding on his rapid chariot to the royal city went,

Came inside the city portals, came within the palace gate,
Struck his forehead in his anguish and bewailed his luckless fate.

Meeting there the prince Uttara, youth of beauty and of fame,
Told him of the Kuru's outrage and lamented Matsya's shame:

"Slay thou and lead of cattle, bred of Matsya's finest breed,
To Hastur's domain captured by the Kuru chieftains lead,

Glory of the Matsya nation! save thy father's valued kine, Quick thy footstep, strong thy valor, vengeance deep and dare be thine!

Against the hero. To our chieftains Matsya's warlike king is gone,
Take we count our lord and saviour as our monarch's gallant son,

Rise, Uttara! beat the Kuru, homeward lead the stolen kine,
Like an elephant of battle, pierce the Kuru's shattered line!

At the Uttara speaker's waste, by musicians tuned aright, Let thy sounding bow and arrows speak thy deeds of matchless
might,

Thence quick thy red-white coarsers to thy sounding battle car,
Hoist thy golden lion banner, speed thee, prince, unto the war!

And as thunder wedding Indra smote Chakras fierce and bold, Slate the Kurus with thy arrows winged with plumes of yellow
gold,

As the famed and warlike Arjun is the stay of Kuru's race,
Thou art refuge of the Matsyas and thy kingdom's pride and grace!

But the prince went not to battle from the foe to guard the State,
To the cowered answered gale, sheltered by the palace gate:

"Not unknown to me the usage of the bow and winged dart,
Not unknown the warrior's duty or the warrior's noble art,

I would win my father's cattle from the wily foeman's greed,
If a skilful chariot driver could my fiery coarsers lead.

For my ancient chariot driver died on battle's gory plain,
For it and twenty days we wept, many warlike chiefs were slain.

Bring me forth a skilful driver who can urge the battle steed,
I will hoist my lion banner, to the dubious battle speed.

Dashing through the foeman's horses, ranks of elephant and car,
I will win the stolen cattle rescued in the field of war.

And like thunder wielding INDRA, smiling Danu's sons of old,
I will snate the Kuru chieftains, drive them to their distant hold !

Blishma and the proud Duryodhan, archer Karna known to fame,
Drona too shall quail before me and retreat in bitter shame,

For those warriors in my absence Matsya's far-famed cattle steal, But beneath my countless arrows Matsya's vengeance they shall feel,

Bring me forth a chariot driver, let me speed my battle car,
And in wonder they will question — Is this Arjun fained in war ?”

THE DISGUISED CHARIOTEER

Arjun, guised as Brihannala, heard the boast Uttara made,
And to try his skill and valour thus to fair Draupadi prayed :

“Say to him that Brihannala will his battle-chariot lead,
That as Arjun's chariot-driver he hath learned to urge the steed,

Say that rich and Brihannala many a dubious war hath seen,
And will win his father's cattle in this contest fierce and keen.”

Fair Draupadi, guised as menial, Arjun's secret hest obeyed, Humbly stepped before Uttara and in gentle accents prayed :

“Hear me, prince, yon Brihannala will thy battle-chariot lead,
He was Arjun's chariot driver, skilled to urge the flying steed,

Trained in war by mighty Arjun, trained to drive the battle-car,
He hath followed helmed Arjun in the glorious field of war,

And when Arjun conquered Khandav, this, Uttara, I have seen, Brihannala drove his chariot, for I served Yudhishthir's queen.”

Heard Uttara hesitating, spake his faint and timid mind, “I would trust thee, beauteous maiden, lotus-bosomed, ever kind,

But a poor and sexless creature, can he rein the warlike steed,
Can I ask him, worse than woman, in the battle's ranks to lead ?”

"Need is mine," Doushumb answered, "Brahma's grace to aid,
 He never let like the victor lose for this great and warlike task,
 And he was swift on the river, the swift had the nation's speed,
 And he was never out of aulk, and the victor's glorious deed."
 Matsya's prince spoke to Arjun, Arjun led the battle car,
 And the dour prince led us to the dread and dubious war.

ARMS AND WEAPONS

Arjun drove the prince of Matsya to a darksome grove, tree, Spoke to the car and warrior in his accents bold and free :
 "Prince, the horse and chariot, arrows, paces, hand and toys are these,
 So much the horse can do as a warrior, and a warrior cannot please,
 Thou shalt mark upon this tree, mark the words which never fail, Stately bows and winged arrows, banners, swords and coat of mail,
 And a bow which strongest warriors scarce can in the battle bear,
 And the limits of a kingdom widen when that bow is strained,
 Tall and slender like a palm-tree, worthy of a warrior's aid, Smooth the wood of it is dived in re, and the ends are of low
 gold !"
 Doubting still Uttara answered : "In this grove's gloomy shade, Corpses hang since many seasons in their wrappings d. d. laid,
 Now I mark them all suspended, horrent, in the open air,
 And to touch the carcasses of objects, fearful, is more than I can dare !"
 "Fear not warrior," Arjun answered, "for the tree conceals no
 dead,
 Warriors' weapons, carved like corpses, lurk within its green shade,

And I ask thee, prince of Matsya, not to touch an unclean thing,
But into a chariot and warrior weapons and his arms to bring."

Prince Uttara gently lighted, climbed the dark and leafy tree,
Again from the prince's chariot bade him speed the arms to free,

And the young prince cast the wrappings; lo! the shining bows appear,
Tasted, voiced like hissing serpents, like the bright stars glistening clear!

Seized with wonder prince Uttara silently the weapons eyed,
And unto his chariot-driver thus in trembling accents cried:

"Whose this bow so tall and stately, speak to me my gentle friend,
On the wood are golden bosses, tipped with gold is either end,

Whose this second ponderous weapon stout and massive in the hold,

On the staff are worked by artists elephants of burnished gold,

And what great and mighty monarch owns this other bow of
might,

Set with golden glittering insects on its ebon back so bright,

Golden suns of wondrous brightness on this fourth their lustre lend,

Who may be the unknown archer who this stately bow can bend,

And the fifth is set with jewels, gems and stones of purest ray,
Golden fire-flies glint and sparkle in the yellow light of day!

Who doth own these shining arrows with their heads in gold encased,

Thousand arrows bright and feathered in the golden quivers placed,

Next are these with vulture-feather, golden-yellow in their hue,
Made of iron keen and whetted, whose may be these arrows true,

Next upon this sable quiver jungle tigers gleam in gold,
And these keen and boar-eared arrows speak some chieftain fierce and bold,

Fourth are these seven hundred arrows crescent in their shining blade,

Thrusting for the blood of foemen and by cunning artists made,

And the fifth are golden erected made of tempered steel and bright, Parrot to their wing these arrows whetted and of wondrous
might!

Mark again this wondrous sabre, shape of toad is on the hilt,
On the blade a toad is graven and the scabbard nobly gilt,

Larger, stouter is this second in its sheath of tiger-skin, Decked with bells and gold studded and the blade is bright and keen,

Next this scimitar so curious by the skilled Nishana made, Scabbard made of wondrous cowhide sheathes the bright and polished blade,

Fourth, a long and beautiful weapon glittering sable in its hilt,
With its sheath of softer goat skin worked with gold on azure felt.

And the fifth is broad and missive over thirty fingers long,
Golden-sheathed and gold embossed like a snake or fiery tongue.

Joyously responded Arjun: "Mark this bow embossed with gold,
'Tis the wondrous bow, Gandiva, worthy of a warrior bold,

Gift of heaven! to archer Arjun kindly gods this weapon sent.
And the confines of a kingdom widen when the bow is bent,

Next, this mighty ponderous weapon worked with elephants of
gold,

With this bow the stalwart Bhima hath the tide of conquests won.

And the third with golden insects by a cunning hand inlaid,
'Tis Yudhishtir's royal weapon by the noblest artists made,

Next the bow with solar lustre brave Nakula wields in fight,
And the fifth is Sahadeva's, decked with gems and jewels bright.

Mark again these thousand arrows, unto Arjun they belong,
And the darts whose blades are crescent unto Bhima brave and strong,

Boar-ear shafts are young Nakula's, in the tiger-quiver cased, Sahadeva owns the arrows with the parrot's feather graced,

These three-knotted shining arrows, thick and yellow vultureplumed,
They belong to King Yudhishtir, with their heads by gold illumed !

Listen more, if of these sabres, prince of Matsya, thou wouldst know,

Arjun's sword is toad-engraven, ever dreaded by the foe,

And the sword in tiger scabbard, massive and of mighty strength, None save tiger-waisted Bhima wields that sword of wondrous length,

Next the sabre golden-hilted, sable and with gold embossed,
Brave Yudhishtir kept that sabre when the king his kingdom lost,

Yonder sword with goat-skin scabbard brave Nakula wields in
war,

In the cowhide Sahadeva keeps his shining scimitar !"

"Strange thy accents," spake Uttara, "stranger are the weapons bright,

Are they arms of sons of Pandu famed on earth for matchless
might,

Where are now those pious princes by a dire misfortune crossed,
Warlike Arjun, good Yudhishtir, by his subjects loved and lost,

Where is tiger-waisted Bhima, matchless fighter in the field,
And the brave and twin-born brothers skilled the arms of war to wield ?

O'er a game they lost their empire and we heard of them no more,
Or perchance they lonesome wander on some wild and distant shore,

And Draupadi noble princess, purest best of womankind, Doth she wander with Yudhishtir, changeless in her heart and mind ?"

Proud, as ever did Arjun, and a smile was on his face,
 "Not in distant land do brothers do their wandering foot-steps trace,

In thy father's court do I live Yudhishthir just and good,
 Here in the father's palace as of old I prepare the food,

Be ye Nikul guards the horses, Sahadeva tends the kine,
 As thy sister's waiting woman doth the fair Draupadi shine,

Thou, my son, do thou attend to my bidding as of old,
 'Tis thou my son who art my life, my joy, my hope, my soul!

RESCUE OF THE CATTLE

Arjun decked his mighty stature in the gleaming arms of war,
 And with voice of distant thunder rolled the mighty battle car,

And the Kurus marked with wonder Arjun's standard lifted proud, Heard with dread the deep Gaṇḍa sounding oft and sounding loud,

And they knew the wondrous bowman wheeling round the battle car,

And with doubt and grave amazement whispered Drona skilled
 war:

"That is Arjun's monkey-standard, how it greets my ancient eyes,
 Well the Kurus know the standard like a comet in the skies,

Hear ye not the deep Gaṇḍa? How my ear its accents greet,
 Mark ye not these pointed arrows falling prone before my feet,

By these darts his salutation to his teacher loved of old,
 Years of exile now completed, Arjun sends with greetings bold

How the gallant prince advances! Now I mark his form and face, Isuing from his dark concealment with a brighter, haughtier grace

Well I know his bow and arrows and I know his standard well,
 And the deep and echoing accents of his far resounding shell,

His shining arms accoutred, gleaming in his helmet dread, Stance he like the flame of Yajur by libations duly fed !”

Arjuna looked the Kuru warriors arming for th’ impending war, Whispered thus to prince Uttara as he drove the battle car, “Step thy steeds, O prince of Matsya ! for too close we may not go,

 So that thy javelins and arrows reach and slay the distant foe,

Soon we cut the Kuru monarch, proud Duryodhan let us meet,
 If not this we win the battle, other chieftains will retreat.

There is Drona my preceptor, Drona’s warlike son is there,
 Kripa and the mighty Bhishma, archer Karna tall and fair,

Them I seek not in this battle, lead, O lead thy chariot far, Midst the chief’s Duryodhan moves not, moves not in the ranks of
 war,

But to save the plundered cattle speeds he onward in his fear,
 While these warriors stay and tarry to defend their monarch’s rear,

But I have these car-borne warriors, other work to-day is mine, Meet Duryodhan in the battle, win thy father’s stolen kine !”

Matsya’s prince then turned the coursers, left behind the war’s scene,

While Duryodhan with the cattle quickly held his onward way,

Krishna marked the course of Arjun, guessed his inmost thought aright,

Thus he spake to brother warriors urging speed and instant fight :

“Advance, chieftains, gallant Arjun wheels his sounding battle-car, To meet our prince the proud Duryodhan seeks to turn the tide of
 war,

Let us fall upon our foeman and our prince and leader save,
 Let save INDRA, god of battles, conquer Arjun fierce and brave, What were Matsya’s fattened cattle, many thousands though they be,

But our monarch sinks in battle like a ship in stormy sea !”

Vain were Kripa's words of wisdom, Arjun drove the chariot far, While his shafts like countless locusts whistled through the ambient air,

Kuru soldiers struck with pain neither stood and fought, nor fled,
Gazed upon the distant Arjun, gazed upon their comrades dead !

Arjun twanged his mighty weapon, flew his far resounding shell, Strangely spoke his monkey standard, Kuru warriors knew it well.

And his voice, Gand his accents, and the chariot's booming shout, Filled the air like constant thunder, shook the firm and solid ground.

Kuru soldiers fled in terror or they slumbered with the dead,
And the reared down cattle with their tails uplifted fled !

WARRIOR'S GUERDON

Now with joy the king Virata to his royal city came,
Saw the rescued herds of cattle, saw him a prince of fame,

Marked the great and brilliant Arjun, helmet-wearing, armour-cased, Knew Yudhishthira and his brothers now as royal princes dressed,

And he greeted good Yudhishthira, truth-beloving brave and strong,
And to valiant Arjun offered Matsya's princess fair and young.

"Pardon, monarch," answered Arjun, "but I may not take as bride, Matsya's young and beautiful princess whom I love with father's pride,

She hath often met me trusting in the inner palace hall,
As a daughter on a father waited on my loving call !

I have trained her And accents, taught her maiden steps in dance, Watched her still and varied graces all her native charms enhance.

Pure as she in thought and action, spotless as my hero boy,
Grant her to my son, O monarch, as his wedded wife and joy !

Abhimanyu trained in battle, handsome youth of godlike race, Krishna's sister, fair Sulhadra, bore the child of princely grace.

Worthy : thy youthful daughter, pure in heart and undefiled, Grant it, sue, my Abhimanyu wed thy young and beauteous child !”

Answered Matsya’s noble monarch with a glad and grateful heart :
“Words like these befit thy virtue, nobly hast thou done thy part,

Be it as thou savest, Arjun, unto Pandu’s race allied, Matsya’s royal line is honoured, Matsya’s king is gratified !”

THE WEDDING

Good Yudhishtir heard the tidings and he gave his free assent, Unto distant chiefs and monarchs kindly invitations sent,

In the town of Upa-plavya, of fair Matsya’s towns the best,
Made their home the pious brothers to receive each royal guest.

Came unto them Kasi’s monarch and his armed troopers came,
And the king of fair Panchala with his sons of warlike fame,

Came the sons of fair Draupadi early trained in art of war,
Other chiefs and sacrificers came from regions near and far.

Krishna decked in floral garlands with his elder brother came,
And his sister fair Subhadra, Arjun’s loved and longing dame,

Arjun’s son brave Abhimanyu came upon his flowery car,
With his elephants and chargers, troopers trained in art of war.

Vijayas from the sea-girt Dwarka, brave Andhakas known to
fame,

Blajas from the mighty Chumbal with the righteous Krishna came,

He to gallant sons of Pandu made his presents rich and rare, Gems and gold and costly garments, slaves and damsels passing fair.

With its quaint and festive greetings came at last the bridal day, Matsya maids were merry-hearted, Pandu’s sons were bright and
gay,

Corn and cymbal, horn and trumpet, pipe, tooth music soft and sweet,

In Virata's royal palace, in the peopled mart and street!

And they slay the junco red deer, and they spread the ample board,

And prepare the cooling palm drink with the richest viands stored,

Mimes and actors please the people, bards recite the ancient song, Clones of heroic houses narrate by their lays prolong!

And deep bosomed damsels of Matsya, grace-form and lotus-face,
With their pearls and golden garlands joyously the bridal grace,

Encircled by those royal ladies, though they all are bright and fair,
Best test shines the fair Draupadi with a beauty rich and rare,

Stately dames and merry maidens lead the young and soft-eyed bride,

As the queens of gods encircle Indra's daughter in her pride!

Arjun to the Matsya monarch takes the princess passing fair,
For his son by far Subhadrâ, nursed by Krishna's loving care,

With a godlike grace Yudhishtir stand by faithful Arjun's side,
As a father takes a daughter, takes the young and beauteous bride.

Joins her hands to Abhimanyu's, and with cake and parched rice,
On the altar brightly blazing doth the holy sacrifice.

Matsya's monarch on the bridegroom rich and costly presents pressed,

Elephants he gave two hundred, steeds seven thousand of the best.

Poured libations on the altar, on the priests bestowed his gold,
Offered to the sons of Pandu rich domain and wealth untold.

With a pious hand Yudhishtir, true in heart and pure in mind,
Made his gifts in gold and garments, kine and wealth of every kind,

Costly chariots, beds of splendour, robes with thread of gold
belaced,

Viands rich and sweet confection, drinks the richest and the best.

Lands he gave unto the Brahman, bullocks to the labouring swain, Steeds he gave unto the warrior, to the people gifts and grain,

And the city of the Matsyas, teeming with a wealth untold, Shone with festive joy and gladness and with flags and cloth of gold.

BOOK VII
UDYOGA

(The Council of War)

The term of banishment having expired, Yudhishtir demanded that the kingdom of Indra-prastha should be restored to him. The old Dhriti-rashtra and his queen and the aged and virtuous councillors advised the restoration, but the jealous Duryodhan hated his cousins with a genuine hatred, and would not consent. All negotiations were therefore futile, and preparations were made on both sides for the most sanguinary and disastrous battle that had ever been witnessed in Northern India.

I

KRISHNA'S SPEECH

Mirth and song and nuptial music waked the echoes of the night, Youthful bosoms throbbed with pleasure, love lit glances sparkled bright,

But when young and white robed Ushas ope'd the golden gates of day,
To Virata's council chamber chieftains thoughtful held their way,

Stones inlaid in arch and pillar glinted in the glittering dawn,
Gay festoons and graceful garlands o'er the golden cushions shone.

Matsya's king, Panchala's monarch, foremost seats of honour clime Krishna too and Valadeva, Dwarka's chiefs of righteous fame,

By them sate the bold Satyaki from the sea-girt western shore,
And the godlike sons of Pandu, days of dark concealment o'er.

Yodhdal princes in their splendour graced Virata's royal hall, Valiant sons of valiant fathers, brave in war, august and tall,
 In their gem-be-spangled garments came the warriors proud and bushy,
 Till the council chamber glittered like the star-be-spangled sky !
 Keen the greeting, sweet the converse, soft the golden moments fly, Till intent on graver questions all on Krishna turn their eye,
 Krishna with his inner vision then the state of things surveyed,
 And his thoughts before the monarchs thus in weighty accents laid :
 "Known to all, ye mighty monarchs ! May your glory ever last,
 True to plighted word Yudhishtir hath his weary exile passed,
 Twelve long years with fair Draupadi in the pathless jungle strayed,
 And a year in menial service in Virata's palace stayed,
 He hath kept his plighted promise, braved affliction woe and shame,
 And he begs, assembled monarchs, ye shall now his duty name.
 For he swerveth not from duty kingdom of the sky to win, Prizeeth Hamlet more than empire, so his course be free from sin,
 Loss of realm and wealth and glory higher virtues in him prove,
 Thoughts of peace and not of anger still the good Yudhishtir move !
 Mark again the sleepless anger and the unrelenting hate,
 Harboured by the proud Duryodhan driven by his luckless fate,
 From a child, by fire or poison, impious guile or trick of dice,
 He hath compassed dark destruction by deceit and low device !
 Ponder well, ye gracious monarchs, with a just and righteous mind, Help Yudhishtir with your counsel, with your grace and blessings kind,
 Should the noble son of Pandu seek his right by open war,
 Seek the aid of righteous monarchs and of chieftains near and far ?
 Should he smite his ancient foemen skilled in each deceitful art, Undertaking in their vengeance, unrelenting in their heart ?

Should he rather send a messenger to the road taken by the foe,
 And Duryodhan's haughty purpose seek by messenger to know?
 Should he send a noble envoy, trained in virtue, true and wise,
 With his greetings to Duryodhan in a week and travelling purse?
 Ask him to restore the kingdom on the sacred Janaki's shore,
 For he may rule his kingdom as in happy days of yore?"

Krishna uttered words of wisdom pregnant with his peaceful counsel,
 For in peace and not by blood had such Yudhishtira's empire sought.

YUDHISHTIRA'S SPEECH

Krishna's elder brother, Krishna's chief who bore the plough, Rose and spoke, the blood of Arjuna's parted over his hairy brow.
 "Ye have heeded, pious monarch, to my brother's gentle word.
 Love his heart to good Yudhishtira and to proud Hastina's lord,
 For he ruled by dark blue lotus good Yudhishtira held of yore, Shave Duryodhan ruled his kingdom on the ruddy Ganga's shore.
 And once more in love and friendship either prince may rule in share,
 For the lands are broad and fertile, and each realm is rich and free.
 Speed the envoy to Hastina with our love and greetings true, Let him speak Yudhishtira's wishes, seek to know Duryodhan's mind,

Make oblation unto Bhishma and to Drona true and brave,
 Unto Kripa, archer Karna, and to each his younger and old,
 To the sons of Draupadi too, and to the Kaurava line,
 And to all the other lords, and to the great and good
 For my peace, and to be sure to give to all the good I wish, Let me speak. Ye Yudhishtira's friends, ye Yudhishtira's all.

Speak he not in rattle and din, for Duryodhan holds the power,
 And Yudhishtira's wrath were folly in this sad and luckless hour,
 By his dearest friends dissuaded, but by rage or madness driven,
 He hath played and lost his empire, may his folly be forgiven!
 Indraprastha's spacious empire now Duryodhan deems his own.
 By his tears and soft entreaty let Yudhishtira seek the throne,
 Open war I do not counsel, humbly seek Duryodhan's grace, War will not restore the empire nor the gambler's loss replace."
 Thus with cold and cruel candour stalwart Valadeva cried,
 And told him the brave Satyaki, who thus to him replied:

SATYAKI'S SPEECH

"Share unto the halting chieftain who thus pleads Duryodhan's
 part,
 Timid counsel, Valadeva, speaks a woman's timid heart,
 Oft now, while stock and serf working clasp who bend the knee,
 As a withered fruitless sapling spuneth from a fruitful tree!
 From a heart so faint and craven, faint and craven words must flow,
 Monarchs in their pride and glory list not to such counsel low,
 Couldst thou, impious Valadeva, midst these potentates of fame,
 On Yudhishtira pious-hearted cast this undeserved blame?
 Chastised by his wife, foreman and by dark misfortune crossed, Trusting to then hath Yudhishtira played a righteous game and lost,
 He is not an unwarred man, nor crowned with a diadem,
 Can a Kshatriya mortals whom he led in sons of royal line?
 Not despoiled of crown and sceptre, not of kingdom and of land,
 Five long years of his life he has spent in the path of strife,

Past his years of weary exile, now he claims his realm of old,
 Claims it, not as humble suppliant, but as king and warrior bold, Past his year of dark concealment, bold Yudhishtir claims his own,
 Proud Duryodhan now must render Indra-prastha's jewelled throne !
 Bhishma counsels, Drona urges, Kripa pleads for fight in vain,
 False Duryodhan will not render what he covets, treacherous gain,
 Open war I therefore counsel, ruthless and relentless war,
 Grace we seek not when we meet them speeding in our battle-car !
 And our weapons, not entreaties, shall our foemen force to yield,
 Yield Yudhishtir's rightful kingdom or they perish on the field,
 False Duryodhan and his forces fall beneath our battle's shock,
 As beneath the bolt of thunder falls the crashed and riven rock !
 Who shall meet the helmed Arjun in the gory field of war,
 Krishna with his fiery steeds mounted on his battle-car,
 Who shall face the twin-born brothers by the mighty Bhima led,
 And the vengeful chief Satyaki with his bow and arrows dread ?
 Ancient Drupad wields his weapon peerless in the field of fight
 And his brave son born of Agni owns an all-consuming might, Abhimanyu, son of Arjun, whom the fair Subhadra bore,
 And whose happy nuptials brought us from far Dwarka's sea-gut shore,
 Men on earth nor bright immortals can the youthful hero face,
 When with more than Arjun's prowess Abhimanyu leads the race .
 Dhrita-rashtra's sons we conquer and Gandhara's wily son, Vanquish Karna though world-honoured for his deeds of valour done,
 Win the fierce-contested battle and redeem Yudhishtir's own,
 Place the exile pious-hearted on his father's ancient throne !
 And no sin Satyaki reckons slaughter of the mortal foe,
 But to beg a grace of foemen were a mortal sin and woe,

Speed we then unto our duty let our impious foemen yield,
Or the fiery son of Sini meets them on the battle field !”

DRUPAD'S SPEECH

Fair Panchala's ancient monarch rose his secret thoughts to tell,
From his lips the words of wisdom with a graceful accent fell :

“Much I fear thou speakest truly, hard is Kuru's stubborn race, Vain the hope, the effort futile, to beseech Duryodhan's grace !

Dhritirashtra pleadeth vainly, feeble is his fitful star,
Ancient Bhishma, righteous Drona, cannot stop this fatal war,

Archer Karna thirsts for battle, moved by jealousy and pride,
Deep Sakuni, false and wily, still supports Duryodhan's side !

Vain is Valadeva's counsel, vainly shall our envoy plead, Half his empire proud Duryodhan yields not in his boundless greed,

In his pride he deems our mildness taint and feeble hearted fear,
And our suit will fan his glory and his arrogance will cheer !

Therefore let our many heralds travel near and travel far,
Seek alliance of all monarchs in the great impending war,

Unto brave and noble chieftains unto nations east and west,
North and south to warlike races speed our message and request !

Meanwhile peace and offered friendship we before Duryodhan place,

And my priest will seek Hastina, strive to win Duryodhan's grace,

It he renders Indra-prastha, peace will crown the happy land, Or our troops will shake the empire from the east to western strand !”

Vainly were Panchala's Brahmans sent with messages of peace, Vainly urged the Kuru elders that the fatal feud should cease, Proud Duryodhan to his kinsmen would not yield their proper share, Pанда's sons would not surrender, for they had the will to dare !

 Fatal war and dire destruction did the night, gods ordain,
 Till the kings and armed nations strewed the red and reeking plain,
 Krishna and his noble court sought for wisdom from above,
 Strive to stop the war of nations and to end the feud in love,
 And to far Hastina's palace Krishna went to sue for peace, Pused his voice against the slaughter, begged that strife and feud should cease !

KRISHNA'S SPEECH AT HASTINA

Silent sat the listening chieftains in Hastina's council hall,
 With the voice of rolling thunder Krishna spoke unto them all :
 "Listen, mighty Dharma-rashtra Kuru's great and ancient king, Seek not war and death of kinsmen, word of peace and love I bring !
 "Midst, the wide earth's many nations Bharats in their worth excel,
 Love and kindness, spotless virtues, in the Kuru elders dwell,
 Father of that noble nation, now retired from life's turmoil,
 It be seems that sin or untruth should thy ancient bosom soil !
 For thy sons in impious anger seek to do their kinsmen wrong,
 And withhold the throne and kingdom which by right to them belong,
 And a danger thus ariseth like the comet's baleful fire,
 Slaughtered kinsmen, bleeding nations, soon shall feed its fatal fire !
 Stretch thy hands, O Kuru monarch ! prove thy truth and bear grace,
 Man of peace ! avert the slaughter and preserve thy ancient race,
 Yet restrain thy fiery children, for thy mandates they obey,
 I with sweet and soft persuasion Pанда's truthful sons will sway.

'To thy profit, Kuru monarch' that the fatal feud should cease, Brave Duryodhan, good Yudhishtir, rule in unmolested peace,
Panda's sons are strong in valour, mighty is their armed hand, KURA shall not shake thy empire when they guard the Kuru land !
Bhishma is thy kingdom's bulwark, doughty Drona rules the war,
Karna matchless with his arrows, Kripa peerless in his car,
Let Yudhishtir and stout Bhima by these noble warriors stand,
And let helmet-wearing Arjun guard the sacred Kuru land,
Who shall then contest thy prowess from the sea to farthest sea,
Ruler of a world wide empire, king of kings and nations free ?
Sons and grandsons, friends and kinsmen, will surround thee in a ring,
And a race of loving heroes guard their ancient hero-king, Dutita-rashtra's lofty edicts will proclaim his boundless sway,
Nations work his righteous mandates and the kings his will obey !
If this concord be rejected and the lust of war prevail,
Soon within these ancient chambers will resound the sound of wail,
Grant thy children be victorious and the sons of Pandu slain, Dear to thee are Panda's children, and their death must cause thee pain !
But the Pandavs skilled in warfare are renowned both near and far,
And thy race and children's slaughter will methinks pollute this
war,
Sons and grandsons, loving princes, thou shalt never see again, Kinsmen brave and car-borne chieftains will bedeck the gory plain !
Fonder yet, O ancient monarch ! Rulers of each distant State, Nations from the farthest regions gather thick to court their fate,
Father of a righteous nation ! Save the princes of the land,
On the armed and fated nations stretch, old man, thy saving band !

Say the word, and at thy bidding leaders of each hostile race,
Not the gory field of battle but the festive board will grace,

Robed in jewels, decked in garlands, they will quaff the ruddy wine,

Greet their toes in mutual fondness, bless thy holy name and think !

Hark, O man of many sons ! When good Pandu left his throne,
And his helpless boys were left, thou didst cheer his throne own,

'Twas thy helping steady fingers taught their infant steps to frame,

'Twas thy loving gentle accents taught their lips to kiss each name,

As thine own they grew and blossomed, dear to thee they were reborn,

Take them back unto thy bosom, be a father once again !

Unto thee, O Dharma-rasa ! Pandu's sons in homage bend,

And a loving parental message through my willing lips they send.

Tell our monarch, more than father, by his sacred stern command,
We have lived in pathless jungle, wandered far from land to land,

True unto our pledged promise, for we ever felt and knew,
To his promise Dharma-rashtra cannot, will not be untrue !

Years of anxious toil are over and of woe and bitterness,

Years of waiting and of watching, years of danger and distress,

Like a dark unending midnight hung on us this age forlorn,

Streaks of hope and dawning brightness usher now the radiant morn !

Be unto us as a father, loving, not inspired by wrath,

Be unto us as a teacher, pointing us the righteous path,

If perchance astray we wander, thy strong arm shall lead aright,

If our feeble bosom fainteth, help us with a father's might !

This, O king ! the soft entreaty Pandu's sons to thee have made,

These are words the sons of Pandu unto Kuru's king have said,

Take their love, O gracious monarch ! Let thy closing days be fair, Let Duryodhan keep his kingdom, let the Pandavs have their share.

Call to mind their noble suffering, for the tale is dark and long,
Of the outrage they have suffered, of the insult and the wrong,

Exiled into Vainavata, destined unto death by flame,
For the gods assist the righteous, they with added prowess came,

Exiled into Indra prastha, by their toil and by their might,
Cleared a forest, built a city, did the varan rite,

Cheated of their realm and empire and of all they called their own,
In the jungle they have wandered and in Matsya lived unknown,

Once more quelling every evil they are stout of heart and hand, Now redeem thy pledged promise and restore their throne and land !

*From the monarch's ancient bosom sighs and sobs convulsive broke,
Krishna glances to peace and love, the crown to you and all,*

Shun 't for aught the world's notion, nor let aught thee kill and ban, Maxims of love, thy solemn motto, and the kindly stain of sin,

Let thy sons and Pandu's children stand on thy ancient throne, Christ for all and all virtues, for thy days are almost done !"

BHISHMA'S SPEECH

From the monarch's ancient bosom sighs and sobs convulsive broke,

Bhishma wiped his manly eyelids and to proud Duryodhan spoke :

"Listen, prince, for righteous Krishna counsels love and holy peace,

Listen, youth, and may thy fortune with thy passing years increase !

Yield to Krishna's words of wisdom, for thy weal he nobly strives, Yield and save thy friends and kinsmen, save thy cherished subjects' lives,

Foremost race in all this wide earth is Hastina's royal line,
 Turn not on the dire destruction by a sinful act of thine !

Sons and fathers, friends and brother, shall in mutual conflict die,
 Kinsmen slain by dearest kinsmen shed upon the red field lie,

Harken to Krishna's counsel, unto wise Vidura's word, Let thy mother's fond entreaty and thy father's mandate heard !

Tempt not wrath and fiery vengeance on thy old heroic race,
 Tread not in the path of darkness, seek the path of light and grace,

Listen to thy king and father, he hath Kuru's empire graced, Listen to thy queen and mother, she hath nursed thee on her breast !”

DRONA'S SPEECH

O a spake Drona priest and warrior, and his words were few and
 high,
 Clouded was Duryodhan's forehead, wrathful was Duryodhan's eye :

Thou hast heard the holy counsel which the righteous Krishna said,
 Heed Bhishma's voice of warning thou hast in thy bosom weighed,

Peerless in their godlike wisdom are these chiefs in peace or strife, Truest friends to thee, Duryodhan, pure and sinless in their life !

Take their counsel, and thy kinsmen listen in the bonds of peace,
 May the empire of the Kurus and their warlike fame increase,

List unto thy old preceptor ! Listless is thy fittful star,
 And they feed thy passions falsely, those who urge and counsel war !

Crowned kings and armed nations will contest for thee in vain, Vainly brothers, sons, and kinsmen will for thee their life blood drain,

For the victor's crown and glory never, never can be thine, Krishna conquers, and brave Arjun ! mark these deathless words of mine !

I have trained the youthful Arjun, seen him bend the warlike bow, Marked him charge the hostile forces, marked him smite the scattered foe,

Every son of Jamadagni owned no greater loftier might,
 Breathes on earth no mortal warrior conquers Arjun in the fight !

Krishna too, in war resistless, comes from Dwarka's distant shore,
 And the bright-gods quake before him whom the fair Devaki bore,

These are foes thou may'st not conquer, take an ancient warrior's word,
 Act thou as thy heart decideth, thou art Kuru's king and lord !”

VIDURA'S SPEECH

Then in gentler voice Vidura sought his pensive mind to tell,
 From his lips serene and softly words of woe and anguish fell :

“Not for thee I grieve, Duryodhan, slain by vengeance fierce and keen,
 For thy father weeps my bosom and the aged Kuru queen !

Sons and grandsons, friends and kinsmen slaughtered in this fatal
 war,
 Homeless, cheerless, on this wide earth they shall wander long and far,

Friendless, kinless, on this wide earth whither shall they turn and fly,
 Like some birds bereft of plumage, they shall pine awhile and die,

Of their race the sad survivors they shall wander o'er the earth, Curse the fatal day, Duryodhan, saw thy sad and woeful birth !”

DHRITA RASHTRA'S SPEECH

Tear drops filled his eyes, his eyeballs, anguish shook his aged frame,

As the monarch soothed Duryodhan by each fond endearing name:

"Listen, dearest son, Duryodhan, shun this dark and fatal strife, Cast not grief and death's black shadow on thy parents' closing life !

Krishna's heart is pure and spotless, true and wise the words he said,

We may win a world wide empire with the noble Krishna's aid,

Seek the friendship of Yudhishtira loved of righteous gods above,
And unite the scattered Kurus by the lasting tie of love !

Now at fall is tide of time, never may it come again,
Strive and win, or ever after all repentance may be vain,

Peace is righteous Krishna's counsel and he comes to offer peace, Take the offered boon, Duryodhan ! Let all strife and hatred cease !"

DURYODHAN'S SPEECH

Silent sat the proud Duryodhan wrathful in the council hall, Spoke to mighty-armed Krishna and to Kuru warriors all :

"Ill becomes thee, Dwarka's chieftain, in the paths of sin to move,
Bear for me a secret hatred, for the Pandas secret love,

And my father, wise Vidura, ancient Bhishma, Drona bold, Join thee in this bitter hatred, turn on me their glances cold !

What great crime or darkening sorrow shadows o'er my bitter fate,
That ye chiefs and Kuru's monarch mark Duryodhan for your hate,

Speak, what nameless guilt or folly, secret sin to me unknown, Turns from me your sweet affection, father's love that was my own ?

If Yudhishtira, fond of gambles, played a heedless reckless game,
 Lost his empire and his freedom, was it then Duryodhan's blame,

And if freed from shame and bondage in his folly played again,
 Lost again and went to exile, wherefore doth he now complain?

Weak are they in friends and forces, feeble is their étîl star,
 Wherefore then in pride and folly seek with us unequal war,

Shall we, who to mighty INDRA scarce will do the homage due,
 Bow to their less sons of Pându and their comrades faint and few,

Bow to them while warlike Drona leads us as in days of old, Bhishma greater than the bright-gods, archer Karna true and bold?

If in dubious game of battle we should forfeit fame and life,
 Heaven will ope its golden portals for the Kshatra slain in strife,

If unbending to our foemen we should press the gory plain,
 Sangless is the bed of arrows, death for us will have no pain!

For the Kshatra knows no terror of his foeman in the field, Breaks like hardened forest timber, bends not, knows not how to yield,

So the ancient sage Matanga of the warlike Kshatra said,
 Save to priest and sage preceptor unto none he bends his head!

Indra-prastha which my father weakly to Yudhishtira gave,
 Nevermore shall go unto him while I live and brothers brave,

Kuru's undivided kingdom Dhriti-rashtra rules alone, Let us sheathe our swords in friendship and the monarch's empire
 own,

If in past in thoughtless folly once the realm was broke in twain,
 Kuru-land is re-united, never shall be split again!

*Take my message to my kinsmen, for Duryodhan's words are plain,
 Portion of the Kuru empire sons of Pându seek in vain,*

Tennor village, mart nor hamlet, help no righteous gods in battle, Yet that name's fame can cover shame not unto them be given!"

BOOK VIII

KAUSHIKA-BADHANA

Fall of Bhishma

All negotiations for a peaceful partition of the Kuru kingdom having failed, both parties now prepared for a battle, perhaps the most sanguinary that was fought on the plains of India in the ancient times. It was a battle of nations, for all the warrior races in Northern India took a share in it.

Duryodhan's army consisted of his own division, as well as the divisions of ten allied kings. Each allied power is said to have brought one akshauhini troop, and if we reduce this fabulous number to the moderate figure of ten thousand, including horse and foot, cars and elephants, Duryodhan's army including his own division was over a hundred thousand strong.

Yudhishtira had a smaller army, said to have been seven akshauhinis in number, which we may, by a similar reduction, reckon to be seventy thousand. His father-in-law, the king of the Panchalas and Arjun's relative, the king of the Matsyas, were his principal allies. Krishna joined him as his friend and adviser, and as the commander of Arjun, but the Vishvamis as a nation had joined Duryodhan.

When the two armies were drawn up in array and faced each other, and Arjun saw his revered elders and dear friends and relations among his foes, he was unwilling to fight. It was on this occasion that Krishna explained to him the great principles of Dharma that memorable word called the Pancha Arjuna, which has been translated into so many beautiful languages. Bala Gangadhar Tilak says: "Delay is the underlying motif of this work, and ever and anon, as Professor Garbe remarks, 'does Krishna revert to the duty of that for every man, no matter to what caste he may belong, his zealous performance of his duty and the discharge of his duty is his most important work.'"

Derivall, in which the young and valorous Bhishma, as the commander in chief of his army, and for ten days Bhishma held his own and defeated the soldiers of Yaddishtha's army. The principal incidents of these ten days, ending with the fall of Bhishma, are narrated in this Book.

This book is an abridgement of Book vi. of the original text.

PANDAVS ROUTED BY BHISHIMA

Ushas with her crimson tresses opened the portals of the day, Nations armed for mortal combat in the field of battle lay,
 Beat it down and blare of trumpet and the ambala's lofty sound,
 By the answering cloud repeated, shook the hills and tented ground,
 And the voice of sounding weapons which the warlike archers drew,
 And the neigh of bulk-chargers as the armed horsemen flew,
 Mingled with the rolling thunder of each swiftly-speeding car,
 And with pealing bells proclaiming mighty elephants' array!
 Bhishma led the Kuru forces, strong as Death's resistless hail,
 Heroic chiefs nor bought immunity could against his might prevail,
 Helmet wearing, gallant Arjuna came in pride and mighty wrath,
 Held aloft his famed Gandiva, strove to cross the chieftain's path!
 Alarmanya son of Arjun, whom the fair Subhadra bore, Drove against Kosala's monarch fenced in arms and holy lore, Hurling down Kosala's standard he the dubious combat won,
 Barely escaped with life the monarch from the fiery Arjun's son!
 Virama was called too Dhanyodhan, Kurus strove in distant war,
 And he smote the proud Duhshyan till Nakula drove him on,
 So many arrows bowmen, then the fierce Damukha's shafts,
 A single arrow took him Nu—the car became a heap of shrapnel.
 The

A mighty host of old folk gathered round the Brahman warrior, and Drona with the proud Panchalas fought once more his feud of old Nations from the Eastern regions 'gainst the bold Virata press of Kripa met the wild Kaikeyas hailing from the farthest West,

Drona, proud and peerless monarch with his cohorts onwarlike,
 'Gave to the warlike Jayadratha chief of Sindhu's sour king's troops and the valiant Matsyas, nations gathered from afar, Drishyas and the fierce Kambojas mingled in the dubious war.

Through the day the battle lasted, and no mortal tongue can tell What unnumbered chieftains perished and what countless fell,

And the son knew not his father, and the sire knew not his son, Brother fought against his brother, strange the deeds of valor done!

Horses fell, and shafts of chariots shivered in resistless storm,
 Flashed against the foe-man's chariots speeding like the rolling

Elephants by malins driven furiously each other tore,
 Trampling with trunks uplifted on the serried soldiers' hoar

Ceaseless plied the gallant troopers, with a stern unyielding Pikes and axes, clubs and maces, swords and spears and lances bright,

Horsemen flew as forked lightning, heroes fought in slanging Archers poured their feathered arrows like the bright and ing hail!

Bhishma leader of the Kurus, as declined the dreadful day,
 Through the shattered Pandav legions forced his all-resistless

Onward went his palm-tree standard through the hostile ranks
 war,

Matsyas, Kasis, nor Panchalas faced the mighty Bhishma's

But the fiery son of Arjun, filled with shame and bitter wrath, Turned his car and tawny coursers to obstruct the chariot

Vainly sought the youthful warrior though his darts were pointed well,
And discovered from his chariot Bhishma's palm-tree standard fell, Archer stirred the ancient Bhishma and he rose in all his might,

Abhimanyu pierced with arrows fell and fainted in the fight !

Then to save the son of Arjan, Matsya's gallant princes came,
Brave Uttara, noble Sweta, youthful warriors known to fame,

Ah ! too early fell the warriors in that sad and fatal strife, Matsya's dames and dark-eyed maidens wept the princes' shortened
life !

Slain by cruel fate untimely fell two brothers young and good, Dauntless still the youngest brother, proud and gallant Sankha stood,

But the helmet-wearing Arjun came to stop the victor's path,
And to save the tearless Sankha from the ancient Bhishma's wrath,

Drapad too, Panchala's monarch, swiftly rushed into the fray, Strove to shield the broken Pandavs and to stop the victor's way

But as fire consumes the forest, wrathful Bhishma slew the foe,
None could face his sounding chariot and his ever-circled bow,

And the fainting Pandav warriors marked the foe, resistless, bold, Shook like unprotected cattle tethered in the blighting cold !

Onward came the mighty Bhishma and the slaughter fiercer grew,
From his bow like hissing serpents still the glistening arrows flew,

Onward came the ancient warrior and his path was strewn with
dead,
And the broken Pandav forces, crushed and driven, scattered fled,

Friendly night and gathering darkness closed the slaughter of the day,
To their tents the sons of Pandu held their sad and weary way !

KURUS ROUTED BY ARJUN

Concealed it bent the good Yudhishthir wept the losses of the day,
Sorrow the aid of gallant Krishna for the morning's fresh array,

And when from the eastern mountains SURYA drove his fiery car,
Killed and the helmed Arjun strove to turn the tide of war.

Bhishma's banner a palm tree standard o'er the field of battle rose, Arjun's a conch standard glistered cleaving through the serried rows

Drona from in a cloud borne chariot, and Gandariva from the sky, Gazed in mute and speechless wonder on the human chiefs from
high!

While with dark and vapour Arjuna still the mighty Bhishma scoured, Waiting for a certain Pandava with the deadly Drona poured

Cerules darts from the proud preceptor sent his darts like summer rain,

Battled by the stall of Drona, Drista-dyumna strove in vain!

But the mercur darts of Drona pierced the prince's shattered row, Hurling on his horse a crash like an angry shower of hail,

And they rent in ruin his boxseats and they cut his proud mace,

Shattered and charred and dented, streaked with blood his golden face!

Dreadless still Pandava's hero, springing from his shattered car,
Like a hungry desert lion with his sabre rushed to war,

Dashed aside the darts of Drona with his broad and ample shield,
With his sabre bravely then a fearless trod the reddened field!

In his rage and his distress he had fallen on that day,
But the ever-vigilant Bhishma to speed the proud preceptor's way,

Proud Drona again marked with anger Bhishma rising in his car,
And he sent Krishna's forces to the sheltering ranks of war.

Onward came Kalinga's forces with the dark tornado's might,
Darky clads, Nishada warriors, gloomy as the sallow night,

Rose the shout of warring nations surging to the battle's fore,
Like the angry voice of tempest and the ocean's troubled roar,

And like dark rolling breakers ranks of armed warriors flew, Scarcely in the thickening darkness friends and kin from foemen knew !

Fell the young prince of Kalinga or the wrathful Bhima slain,
But against Kalinga's monarch batted Bhima fought in vain,

Safely sat the eastern monarch on his konda's lofty seat,
Till upon the giant tusked Bhima sprang with agile feet,

Then he struck with fatal fury, brave Kalinga fell in twain,, Scattered fled his countless forces when they saw their leader slain !

Darkly rolled the tide of battle where Duryodhan's valiant son, Strive against the son of Arjun tared for deeds of valour done,

Proud Duryodhan marked the contest with a father's anxious heart,
Came to save his gallant Lakshman from brave Abhimanya's dart,

And the helmet-wearing Arjun marked his son among his foes, Wheelled from far his battle-chariot and in wrath terrific rose !

"Arjun !" "Arjun !" cried the Kurus and in panic broke and fled, Steed and tusked turned from battle, soldiers fell among the dead,

Godlike Krishna drove the coursers of resistless Arjun's car,
And the sound of Arjun's sankha rose above the cry of war,

And the voice of his Gandiva spread a terror far and near, Crashed and broken, faint and frightened, fled the Kurus in their fear,

Onward still through scattered foemen conquering Arjun held his way,

Till the evening's gathering darkness closed the action of the day !

BHISHMA AND ARJUN MEET

Anxious was the proud Duryodhan when the golden morning came,
 For before the car of Arjun fled each Kuru chief of fame,
 Brave Duryodhan shook in anger and a tremor moved his frame,
 As he spake to ancient Bhishma words of wrath in bitter shame :
 "Bhishma ! dost thou lead the Kurus in this battle's crimson field, Warlike Drona, doth he guard us like a broad and ample shield ?
 Wherefore then before von Arjun do the valiant Kurus fly, Wherefore doth our leader linger when he hears the battle-cry ?
 Doth a secret love for Pandavs quell our leader's matchless might,
 With a halting zeal for Kurus doth the noble Bhishma fight ?
 Pardon, chiet, if for the Pandavs doth thy partial heart incline, Yield thy place, let embold Karna lead my gallant Kuru line !"
 Anger flamed on Bhishma's forehead and the tear was in his eye,
 And in accents few and trembling thus the warrior made reply :
 "Vain our toil, unwise Duryodhan ! Nor can Bhishma warrior old,
 Nor can Drona skilled in weapons, Karna archer proud and bold, Wash the stain of deeds unholy and of wrongs and outraged laws,
 Conquer with a load of cunning 'gainst a right and righteous cause, Deaf to wisdom's voice, Duryodhan, deaf to parents and to kin,
 Thou shalt perish in thy folly, in thy unrepented sin !
 For the wrongs and insults offered unto good Yudhishtir's wife,
 For the kingdom from him stolen, for the plots against his life,
 For the dreadful oath of Bhuma, for the holy counsel given,
 Vainly given by saintly Krishna, thou art doomed by righteous
 Heaven !
 Meanwhile since he leads thy forces, Bhishma still shall meet his end,
 Or to conquer or to perish to the battle's front I go."

Speaking thus, unto the battle ancient Bhishma held his way, Sweeping all before his chariot as he swept them day by day,

And the army of Yudhishtir shook from end to farthest end, Arjun nor the valiant Krishna could against the tide contend !

Cars were shattered, fed the coursers, elephants were pierced and
slain,

Shatts of chariots, broken standards, lifeless soldiers strewed the plain,

Coats of mail were left by warriors as they ran with streaming hair, Soldiers fled like herds of cattle stricken by a sudden fear !

Krishna, Arjun's chariot-driver, and a chief of righteous fame,
Marked the broken Pandav forces, spake in grief and bitter shame :

"Arjun ! not in hour of battle hath it been thy wont to fly,
Forward lay thy path of glory, or to conquer or to die !

If to-day with angry Bhishma, Arjun shuns the dubious fight, Shame on Krishna ! if he joins thee in this sad inglorious flight,

Be it mine alone, O Arjun ! warrior's wonted work to know,
Krishna with his fiery discus smites the ad-resistless foe !"

Then he flung the reins to Arjun, left the steeds and sounding car, Leaped upon the field of battle, rushed into the dreadful war.

"Shame !" cried Arjun in his anger, "Krishna shall not wage the fight,

Nor shall Arjun like a recreant seek for safety in his fight !"

And he dashed behind the warrior and on foot the chief pursued, Caught him as the angry Krishna still his distant foeman viewed,

Stalwart Arjun lifted Krishna, as the storm lifts up a tree,
Placed him on his battle-chariot and he bent to him his knee :

"Pardon, Krishna, this compulsion, pardon this transgression bold,
But while Arjun lives, O chieftain ! weapon of thy wrath withhold !

By my warrior Alhimanyu, fair Subhadra's darling boy,
 By my brothers, dearer, truer, than in hours of pride and joy,
 By my mother I pledge thee, Kishni, let thy angry discus sleep, Archer Arjun meets his toeman, and his plighted word will keep."
 Forthwith rushed the grey Arjun in his sounding battle-car,
 And like waves before him parted serried ranks of hostile war, Vainly lashed his lance Duryodhan 'gainst the valiant warrior's face,
 Vainly Salya, King of Madra, threw with skill his pond'rous mace,
 With disdain the godlike Arjun dashed the feeble darts aside,
 Held aloft his famed Gandiva as he stood with haughty pride,
 Beat of drum and blare of sankha and the thunder of his car,
 And his weapon's fearful accents rose terrific near and far!
 Came resistless Pandya forces, sweeping onward wave on wave, Chedis, Matsyas and Panchalas, chieftains true and warriors brave, Onward too came forth the Kurus by the matchless Bhishma led,
 Shouts arose and cry of anguish midst the dying and the dead,
 But the evening closed in darkness and the night fires fierful flared, Fainting troops and bleeding chieftains to their various tents repaired!

DURYODHAN'S EIGHT BROTHERS SLAIN

Dawned another day of battle; Kurus knew that day too well, Widowed queens of fair Hastina wept before the evening fell,
 For as whirlwind of destruction Bhima swept in mighty wrath,
 Broke the serried line of tuskers vainly sent to cross his path, Smote Duryodhan with his arrows, three terrific darts and five, Smote proud Salya; from the battle scarce they bore the chiefs alive!
 Then Duryodhan's fourteen brothers rushed into the dreadful fray,
 Fatal was the luckless moment, inauspicious was the day,

Licked his mouth the vengeful Bhima, and he shook his bow and lance,
 As the lion lolls his red tongue when he sees his prey advance, Short and fierce the furious combat ; six pale princes turned and fled,
 Eight of proud Duryodhan's brothers fell and slumbered with the dead !

SATYAKI'S SONS SLAIN

Morning with her fiery radiance oped the portals of the day, Shone once more on Kuru warriors, Pandav chiefs in dread array,
 Bhima and the gallant Arjun led once more the van of war,
 But the proud preceptor Drona faced them in his sounding car !
 Still with gallant son of Arjun, Lakshman strove with bow and shield,
 Vainly strove ; his faithful henchman bore him bleeding from the field,
 Lakshman son of proud Duryodhan, Abhimanyu 'Arjun's son,
 Doomed to die in youth and glory 'neath the same revolving sun !
 Sad the day for Vrishni warriors ! Brave Satyaki's sons of might
 'Gainst the cruel Bhuri-sravas strove in unrelenting fight, Ten brave brothers, pride of Vrishni, fell upon that fatal day, Slain by mighty Bhuri sravas on the battle's red field lay !

BHIMA'S DANGER AND RESCUE

Dawned another day of slaughter ; heedless Bhima forced his way Through Duryodhan's serried legions, where dark death and danger lay,
 And a hundred foemen gathered and unequal was the strife,
 Bhima strove with furious valour for his forfeit was his life !

Fair Panchala's watchful monarch saw the danger from afar, Forced his way where bleeding Bhima fought beside his shattered car,

And he helped the fainting warrior, placed him on his chariot-seat,
But the Kurus darkly gathered, surging round as waters meet !

Arjun's son and twelve brave chieftains dashed into the dubious fray,
Rescued Bhima and proud Drupad from the Kuru's grim array.

Surging still the Kuru forces onward came with ceaseless might, Drona smote the scattered Pandavs till the darksome hours of night !

PANDAVS ROUTED BY BHISHMA

Morning came and an ev' Arjun rushed into the dreadful war, Krishna drove his milk-white coursers, onward flew his sounding
car,

And before his monkey banner quailed the faint and frightened foes,
Till like star on billowy ocean Bhisma's palm tree banner rose !

Vainly then the good Yudhishtir, stalwart Bhima, Arjun brave, Strove with useless toil and valour shattered ranks of war to save,

Vainly too the Pandav brothers on the peerless Bhishma fell, Gods in sky nor earthly warriors Bhishma's matchless might could quell !

Fell Yudhishtir's lofty standard, shook his chariot battle-tent,
Fell his proud and fiery coursers, and the dreadful day was bent,

Sahadeva and Nakula vainly strove with all their might,
Till their broken scattered forces rested in the shades of night !

IRAVAT SLAIN

Morning saw the turn of battle ; Bhishma's charioteer was slain,
And his couriers uncontrolled flew across the reddened plain,

All it fared with Kuru forces when their leader went astray,
And their foremost chiefs and warriors with the dead and dying lay.

But Gandhara's mounted princes rode across the battle-ground,— For its steeds and matchless chargers is Gandhara's realm renowned,

And to smite the young Iravat fierce Gandhara's princes swore, Brave Iravat son of Arjun, whom a Naga princess bore !

Mounted on their milk-white chargers proudly did the princes sweep,

Like the sea birds skimming gaily o'er the bosom of the deep,

Five of stout Gandhara's princes in that fatal combat fell,
And a sixth in fear and faintness fled the woeful tale to tell !

Short, alas, Iravat's triumph, transient was the victor's joy, Munbusha dark and dreadful came against the gallant boy,

Fierce and fatal was the combat, mournful is the tale to tell,
Like a lotus rudely severed gallant son of Arjun fell !

Arjun heard the tale of sorrow and his heart was filled with grief,
And he spake a father's anguish in his accents few and brief :

"Wherefore, Krishna, for a kingdom mingle in this fatal fray, Kinsmen killed and comrades slaughtered, dear, alas, the price we pay !

Woe unto Hastina's empire built upon our children's grave, Dearer than the throne of monarchs was Iravat young and brave,

Young in years and rich in beauty, with thy mother's winsome eye,
Art thou slain, my gallant warrior, and thy father was not nigh ?

But thy young blood calls for vengeance ! noble Krishna drive the car,

Let them feel the father's prowess, those who slew the son in war !"

And he dashed the rising tear drop and his words were few and brief,

Broken ranks and shattered crests spoke an angry father's grief,

Bhima too revenged Dravata, and as onward still he flew,
Brothers of the proud Duryodhan in that fatal combat slew.

Still advanced the fatal carnage till the darksome close of day,
When the wounded and the weary with the dead and dying lay

Tell me thickening shades of darkness on the red and ghastly plain, Torches by the white tents thicketed, red fires showed the countless
slain,

With a bosom sorrow-laden proud Duryodhan drew his breath,
Wept the issue of the battle and his warlike brothers' death

Spent with grief and silent sorrow slow the Kuru monarch went Where arose in dewy starlight Bhishma's proud and snowy tent,

And with tears and soft entreaty thus the sad Duryodhan spoke,
And his mournful bitter accents oft by heaving sighs were broke

"Bhishma ! on thy matchless prowess Kuru's hopes and life depend,

Gods nor men with warlike Bhishma can in field of war contend,

Brave in war are sons of Panda, but they face not Bhishma's
might,

In their fierce and deathless hatred slay my brothers in the race !"

Mind thy pledge, O chief of Kurus, save Hastina's royal race,
On the ancient king my father grant thy never-failing grace,

If within thy noble bosom, pardon cruel words I say,
Secret love for sons of Pandu holds a soft and partial sway,

If thy inner heart's affections unto Pandu's sons incline, Grant that Karna lead my forces 'gainst the foeman's hostile line !”

Bhishma's heart was full of sadness and his eyelids dropped a tear, Soft and mournful were his accents and his vision true and clear :

“Vain, Duryodhan, is this contest, and thy mighty host is vain, Why with blood of friendly nations drench this red and reeking plain ?

They must win who, strong in virtue, fight for virtue's stainless laws,
Doubly armed the stalwart warrior who is armed in righteous cause,

Think, Duryodhan, when Gandharras took thee captive and a slave,
Did not Arjun rend thy fetters, Arjun righteous chief and brave,

When in Matsya's fields of pasture captured we Virata's kine,
Did not Arjun in his valour beat thy countless force and mine ?

Krishna now hath come to Arjun, Krishna drives his battle-car, Gods nor men can face these heroes in the field of righteous war,

Ruin frowns on thee, Duryodhan, and upon thy impious State,
In thy pride and in thy folly thou hast courted cruel fate,

Bhishma still will do his duty, and his end it is not far,
Then may other chieftains follow, -fatal is this Kuru war !”

Dawned a day of mighty slaughter and of dread and deathful war,
Ancient Bhishma in his anger drove once more his sounding car,

Morn to noon and noon to evening none could face the victor's wrath,

Broke and shattered, faint and frightened, Pandavs fled before his path,

Still amidst the dead and dying moved his proud restless car,
Till the gathering night and darkness closed the horrors of the war !

Good Yudhishthira gazed with sorrow on the dark and ghastly plain,
 Stood his tears on cheeks and warriors by the matchless Bhishma
 slain :

"Vain this unavailing battle, vain this woeful loss of life,
 'Gainst the death-compelling Bhishma hopeless is this aid to strife !

As a lordly tusker tramples on a marsh of feeble reeds,
 As a forest conflagration on the parched woodland reeds,

Bhishma tramples on my forces in his mighty battle-car,
 Good nor mortal chief can face him in the gory field of war !

Vain our toil and vain the valour of our kinsmen loved and lost,
 Vainly fight my faithful brothers by a lackless fortune crost, Nations pour their life-blood vainly, ceaseless wakes the sound of woe,

Krishna, stop this cruel carnage, unto woods once more we go !"

So they held a council and the chiefs in silence met,
 And they went to ancient Bhishma, love and mercy to entreat,

Bhishma loved the sons of Pandu with a father's loving heart, But from troth unto Duryodhan righteous Bhishma would not part !

"Sons of Panda !" said the chieftain, "Prince Duryodhan's no
 lord,

Bhishma is no faithless servant nor will break his plighted word,

Valiant are ye, noble princes, but the chief is yet unborn,
 While I lead the course of battle, who the tide of war can turn !

Listen more. With vanquished foeman, or who falls or takes to flight,

Casts his weapons, craves for mercy, ancient Bhishma doth not fight,

Bhishma doth not fight a rival who submits, fatigued and worn, Bhishma doth not fight the wounded, doth not fight a woman born !”

Back unto their tents the Pandavs turn with Krishna deep and wise,
 He unto the anxious Arjun thus in solemn whisper cues :

“Arjun, there is hope of triumph ! Hath not truthful Bhishma sworn,
 He will fight no wounded warrior, he will fight no woman born ?

Female child was brave Sikhandin, Drupad’s youngest son of pride, Gods have turned him to a warrior, placed him by Yudhishtir’s side,

Place him in the van of battle, mighty Bhishma leaves the strife, Then with ease we fight and conquer, and the forfeit is his life !”

“Shame !” exclaimed the angry Arjun, “not in secret heroes fight, Not behind a child or woman screen their valour and their might,

Krishna, loth is archer Arjun to pursue this hateful strife,
 Tuck against the sinless Bhishma, fraud upon his spotless life !

Listen, good and noble Krishna ; as a child I climbed his knee,
 As a boy I called him father, hung upon him lovingly,

Perish conquest dearly purchased by a mean deceitful strife, Perish crown and jewelled sceptre won with Bhishma’s saintly life !”

Gravely answered noble Krishna : “Bhishma falls by close of day, Victim to the cause of virtue, he himself hath showed the way,

Dear or hated be the foeman, Arjun, thou shalt fight and slay, Wherefore else the blood of nations hast thou poured from day to day ?”

Morning dawned, and mighty Arjan, Abhimanyu young and bold, Drupad monarch of Panchala, and Virata stern and old,

Brave Yudhishtir and his brothers clad in arms and shining mail, Rushed to war where Bhishma’s standard gleamed and glittered in the gale !

THE EPIC OF THE BILARATAS

Proud Duryodhan marked their onset and its fatal purpose knew,
And his bravest men and chieftains gathered the new Pandas there,

With Kumbha's stalwart rearmach and with Drona's mighty force,
With the valiant Bowman Kripa stemmed the battle still unwon!

And his younger, fierce Daksas, thirsting for the deathful war,
'Gainst the Helinet went on; Arjan drew his mighty battle car,

As a fabled jagged mountain meets the angry ocean's sway,
Proud Duryodhan waded with Arjun in his wild and onward way,

And a named white-winged sea bird swoop'd upon the dark sea wave,

Clouds of darts and discarding lances dark the red blood of the brave!

Other valiant Kuru chieftains came, the bravest and the best,
Drona's self and Bhishma, rearmach of the farthest East,

Carbome Salva, mighty warrior, king of Madra's distant land, Princes from Avanti's regions, chiefs from Malwa's rocky strand,

Ivadratha a peerless fighter, king of Sindhu's sounding shore, Chitrasena and Vikarna, countless chiefs and valiant men!

And they faced the new Pandas peerless in their valiant manner, Long and dreadful waged the combat, darts closed the dubious fight,

Darting like clouds of summer, glittering darts like heliotropes played,

Darting like the sky with arrows, thicker grew the gloomy smoke.

Cars went down and madd'd horsemen, soldiers fell in dread array,
Elephants with white tusks broken and with mangled bodies lay!

Arjan and the stalwart Bhishma piercing through their countless ranks Side by side repelled their chariots where the palm tree stand rose,

Where the peerless ancient Bhishma on that dark and fatal day,
Warring with the banded nations still restless held his way!

On he came, his palm-tree standard still the front of battle knew,
And like an oncoming dark cloud parting Bhishma burst on Arjun's view,

And his eyes brave Arjun shaded at the awe-inspiring sight, Halt he wished to turn for shelter from that chief of godlike
might !

But bold Krishna drove his chariot, whispered low his fatal plan
Arjun placed the young Sikhandin in the deathful battle's van,

Bhishma viewed the Pandav forces with a calm unmoving face,
Saw not Arjun's fair Gada, saw not Bhima's mighty mace, Smiled to see the young Sikhandin rushing to the battle's fore,
Like the foam upon the billow when the mighty storm winds roar !

Bhishma thought of word he plighted and of oath that he had sworn,
Dropped his arms before the warrior who a female child was born,

And the standard which no warrior ever saw in base retreat,
Like stood upon the chariot, threw its shade on Bhishma's seat,
And the flag that fell discovered on the crushed and broken car,
As on an azure sky of midnight falls the meteor's flaming star !

Not Sikhandin's feeble arrows did the palm-tree standard fell,
Not Sikhandin's feeble lances did the peerless Bhishma quell,

True to oath and unresisting, Bhishma turned his face away,
Turned and fell, the sun declining marked the closing of the day !

Ended thus the fatal battle, truce came with the close of day, Kurus and the silent Pandavs went where Bhishma dying lay,

Arjun wept as for a father weeps a sad and sorrowing son,
Good Yudhishthir cursed the morning Kuru-kshetra's war begun,

Stood Duryodhan and his brothers mantled in the gloom of grief, Lies like loving brothers sorrowed round the great the dying chief !

Arjun's keen and pointed arrows made the hero's dying bed,
And in soft and gentle accents to Duryodhan thus he said :

"List unto my words, Duryodhan, uttered with my latest breath,
List to Bhishma's dying counsel and revere the voice of death,
And this dread and deathful battle if thy stony heart can grieve,
Save the chieftains doomed to slaughter, bid the fated nations live, Grant his kingdom to Yudhishtir righteous man beloved of Heaven,

Keep thy own Hastina's regions, be the hapless past forgiven !"

Vain, alas, the voice of Bhishma like the voice of angel spoke, Hatred dearer than his life blood in the proud Duryodhan woke !

Darker grew the gloomy midnight and the princes went their way,
On his bed of pointed arrows Bhishma lone and dying lay,

Karna, though he loved not Bhishma whilst the chieftain lived in
fame,

Gently to the dying Bhishma in the midnight darkness came !

Bhishma heard the tread of Karna and he oped his glazing eye,
Spoke in love and spoke in sadness and his bosom heaved a sigh

"Pride and envy, noble Karna, filled our warlike hearts with strife, Discord ends with breath departing, envy sinks with fleeting life !

More I have to tell thee, Karna, but my parting breath may fail, Feeble are my dying accents and my parched lips are pale,

Arjun beats not noble Karna in the deeds of valour done,
Nor excels in birth and lineage, Karna, thou art Pritha's son !

Pritha bore thee, still unwedded, and the Sun inspired thy birth, God-born man ! No mightier archer treads this broad and spacious earth,

Pritha cast thee in her sorrow, hid thee with a maiden's shame,
And a driver, not thy father, nursed thee, chief of warlike fame,

Arjun is thy brother, Karna, end this sad maternal war, Seek not life blood of thy brother nor against him drive thy car !"

Vain, alas, the voice of Bhishma like the voice of angel spoke, Hatred dearer than his life-blood in the vengeful Karna woke !

BOOK IX

DRONA-BADHA

(Fall of Drona)

On the fall of Bhishma the Brahman chief Drona, preceptor of the Kuru and Pandav princes, was appointed the leader of the Kuru forces. For five days Drona held his own against the Pandavs, and some of the incidents of these days, like the fall of Abhimanyu and the vengeance of Arjun, are among the most stirring passages in the Epic. The description of the different standards of the Pandav and the Kuru warriors is also interesting. At last Drona slew his ancient foe, the king of the Panchalas, and was then slain by his son the prince of the Panchalas.

The Book is an abridgment of Book vii. of the original text.

SINGLE COMBAT BETWEEN BHIMA AND SALYA

Morning ushered in the battle ; Pandav warriors heard with dread Drona priest and proud preceptor now the Kuru forces led,

And the foe-compelling Drona pledged his troth and solemn word,
He would take Yudhishtir captive to Hastina's haughty lord !

But the ever faithful Arjun to his virtuous elder bowed,
And in clear and manful accents spake his warlike thoughts aloud :

"Sacred is our great preceptor, sacred is acharya's life,
Arjun may not slay his teacher even in this mortal strife !

Saying this, command, O monarch, Arjun's bow and warlike sword,

For thy safety, honoured elder, Arjun stakes his plighted word,

Matchless in the art of battle as our teacher fierce and dread,
But he comes not to Yudhishtira save o'er blood of Arjun shed !”

Monarch withered day Drona foremost in the battle's tide,
But Yudhishtira's warlike chieftains compassed him on every side.

Foremost of the youthful chieftains came resistless Arjun's son, Father's blood and mark of mother's deed his deeds of valor done !

As the lion of the jungle drags the ox into his lair, Albanyu from his chariot dragged Paandava by the hair.

Joyed with the sight Sindha marked the faint and captive chief,
Leaping from his chariot battle-wrathful came to his relief.

Albanyu with his captive, turned upon the mightier foe,
And with sword and hardened buckler gave and parried many a blow !

Ruck to ruck from both the towers cry of admiration rose, Stranger men pressed tooth in worder, watched the combat close and close,

Perona Albanyu's buckler Jayadratha sent his stroke,
But the turned and twisted sword-blade snapping in the midway broke !

Weaponless the hero of Sindha ran into his sheltering car,
Salya came unto his car from a little-held star,

Darting, on the new assailant Arjun's son his weapon drew, Interposing 'twixt the fighters Bhima's self on Salya flew !

Stoutest warriors in the armies, fiercest fighters with the mace,
Blame and the valiant Salya stood as rivals face to face,

Hamper and mace bound their naces and the wire of twisted gold, Whirling bright in circling flashes, shook their staff the warriors bold !

Out they struck, and sparks of red fire issued from the seasoned wood,

And like horned bulls intumesc Madra's king and Bhima stood,

Closer still they came like tigers closing with their reddened paws,
Or like tusked with their red tusks, eagles with their rending claws!

Loud as INDRA's peals of thunder still their blows were echoed round,
Rank to rank the startled soldiers heard the oft repeated sound, but as strikes in vain the lightning on the solid mountain-rock, Bhima nor the fearless Salya fell or moved beneath the shock!

Closer drew the warchief heroes and their clubs were wielded well,
Till by many blows belaboured both the fainting fighters fell,

Like a drunkard dazed and reeling Bhima rose his staff to wield,
Senseless Salya, heavy breathing, henchman carried from the field,

Writhing like a wounded serpent, lifted from the field of war,
He was carried by his soldiers to the shelter of his car!

Drona still with matchless prowess strove to keep his plighted
 word,
Sought to take Yudhishtir captive to Duryodhan, Kuru's lord,

Vainly then the twin-born brothers came to cross the conqueror's
 path,
Matsya's lord, Panchala's monarch, vainly faced him in his wrath,

Rank to rank the cry resounded circling o'er the battle-field,
"Drona takes Yudhishtir captive with his bow and sword and shield!"

Arjun heard the dreadful message and in haste and fury came,
Strove to save his king and elder and redeem his loyal fame,

Speeding with his milk-white coursers dashed into the thick of
 war,
Blew his shrill and dreaded sankla, drove his sounding battle-car,

Fiercer, darker grew the battle, when above the reddened plain,
Evening drew her peaceful mantle o'er the living and the slain!

STANDARDS OF THE PANDAVS

Morning came ; still so and Yudhishtir Drona led the gathering
war,

Again fought the San-saptakas in a battle field afar,

But the prince of fair Panchala marked his father's ancient foe,
And against the doerhty Drona, Dhis'at-dyunna bent his bow

But as darksome clouds massed angry gusts of storm divide, Through the scattered fighting foemen Drona drove his car in
pride,

Steeds went down and even chariots, young Panchala turned and fled,

Onward drove resistless Drona o'er the dying and the dead !

One more prince of fair Panchala 'gainst the mighty Drona came Ancient feud ran in the red blood of Panchala's chiefs of fame,

Fated youth ! with reckless valour still he fought his father's foe Fought and fell ; relentless Drona laid the brave Satyaji low

Surging still like ocean's billows other Pandav warriors came,
To protect their virtuous monarch and redeem their ancient name

Came in various battle chariots drawn by steeds of every hue, Various were the chieftains' standards which the warring ranks knew !

Bhama drove his stalwart horses tinted like the dappled deer, Grey and pigeon-coloured coursers bore Panchala's prince of peer,

Horses bred in famed Kamboja, dark and grey of deepest hue, Brave Nakula's sumptuous chariot in the deathful battle drew

Piebald horses trained to battle did young Sahadeva rear, Ivory-white Yudhishtir's coursers with their flowing ebons

And by him with gold umbrella valiant monarch Drupad came Horses of a bright bay-colour carried Matsya's king of fame

Varied as then various coarsets gallantly their standards rose,
 With their wondrous strange devices, terror of their armed foes,
 Water-jar on tawny deerskin, such was Drona's sign of war,
 Drona as a tender infant rested in a water jar,
 Golden moon with star surrounding was Yudhishtar's sign of yore,
 Silver lion was the standard tiger-waisted Bhima bore, Brave Nakula's sign was the deer with its back of burnished gold, Silver swan with bell's resounding Sahadeva's onset told,
 Golden peacock rich-en-blazoned was young Abhishanya's joy, Vulture shone on Ghatotkacha, Bhima's proud and gallant boy.
 Now Duryodhan marked the toemen heaving like the rising tide,
 And he faced the wrathful Bhima towering in his tankless pride,
 Short the war, for proud Duryodhan wounded from the battle fled,
 And his warriors from far Anga rested with the countless dead !
 And with him Bhagadatta, monarch of the furthest East,
 And his subject conquered forces on the valiant Bhima pressed,
 Came from far the wrathful Arjun and the battle's front he sought,
 Where by eastern foes surrounded still the stalwart Bhima fought !
 Hated from afar the mighty Bhishma-putra's sounding shore,
 Lord of rising sea will hail him, and his noble peers no more,
 For his tusker pierced by arrows trumpeted his dying wail,
 Like a red and flaming meteor gallant Bhagadatta fell !
 Then with rising wrath and anguish Karna's noble bosom bled, Karna who had stayed from battle while his rival Bhishma led,
 Ancient hate and jealous anger clouded Karna's warlike heart,
 And while Bhishma led, all idly slumbered Karna's bow and dart,
 Now he marked with warrior's anguish all his comrades fled afar,
 And his foeman Arjun sweeping o'er the red field of the war !
 Flashed like a tongue of red fire shot from Karna's flaming eye,
 And he sprang to meet his foeman or to conquer or to die.

Pierce and dubious was the battle, answering clouds gave back the din,

Karna met his dearest foeman and, alas, his nearest kin !

Bama and Pandava's warriors unto Arjun's rescue came,
Proud Duryodhan came to Karna, and fair Sindhu's king of fame,

Fiercely waged the gory combat, when the night its shadows threw,
Wounded men and blood-stained chieftains to their nightly tents withdrew !

ABHIMANYU'S DEATH

Fate was the blood-red morning purpling o'er the angry east, Fate drew to Abhimanyu, bravest warrior and the best,

Countless were the gallant chieftains like the sands beside the sea, None with braver bosom battled, none with hands more stout and free !

Brief, alas, thy radiant summers, fair Subhadra's gallant boy, Loved of Matsya's soft-eyed princess and her young heart's pride and joy,

Brief, alas, thy sainted winters, light of war too early quenched, Peerless son of peerless Arjan, in the blood of foemen drenched

Drona on that fatal morning ranged his dreadful battle-line
In a circle darkly spreading where the chiefs with chiefs combated

And the Pandavs looked despairing on the battle's dread array, Vainly strove to force a passage, vainly sought their onward way

Abhimanyu, young and fiery, dashed alone into the war,
Reckless through the shattered forces all resistless drove his car,

Elephants and crashing standards, neighing steeds and warriors
slain

Fell before the furious hero as he made a ghastly lane !

Proud Duryodhan rushed to battle, strove to stop the turning tide,
And his stoutest trust warriors fought by proud Duryodhan's side

Onward still went Abhimanyu, Kurus strove and fought in vain, Backward reeled and fell Duryodhan and his bravest chiefs were slain !

Next came Salya car-borne monarch 'gainst the young resistless foe, Urged his fiery battle-coursers, stretched his death-compelling bow,

Onward still went Abhimanyu, Salya strove and fought in vain,
And his warriors took him bleeding from the reddened battle-plain !

Next Duhsasan darkly lowering thundered with his bended bow, Abhimanyu smiled to see him, kinsman and the dearest foe,

"Art thou he," said Abhimanyu, "known for cruel word and deed, Impious in thy heart and purpose, base and ruthless in thy greed ?

Didst thou with the false Sakuni win a realm by low device,
Win his kingdom from Yudhishthir by ignoble trick of dice,

Didst thou in the council chamber with your insults foul and keen
By her flowing raven tresses drag Yudhishthir's stainless queen,

Didst thou speak to warlike Bhima as thy serf and bounden slave, Wrong my father righteous Arjun, peerless prince and warrior brave ?

Welcome ! I have sought thee often, wished to cross thy tainted
path,

Welcome ! Dearest of all victims to my nursed and cherished wrath,

Reap the meed of sin and insult, draw on earth thy latest breath,
For I owe to Queen Draupadi, impious prince, thy speedy death !"

Like a snake upon an ant-hill, on Duhsasan's wicked heart
Fell with hissing wrath and fury Abhimanyu's fiery dart,

From the loss of blood Duhsasan fainted on his battle-car, Kuru chieftains bore him senseless from the blood-stained scene of
war !

Next in gleaming arms accoutred came Duryodhan's gallant son,
Proud and warlike as his father, famed for deeds of valour done,

Yours, O Bilharat, I have known, for all I have not too well,
 And know you as a man, rather proud and gallant Baked man fell

O great warrior, Bilharat, amidst the danger and the dead, Shook from the back of the knees and then shattered army the

Then the warrior, Bilharat, knave and Sadr of the land of stone, Came to the front of the army with the brave warriors more,

Darted forward with the sword and the spear, with the sword and the spear,
 Darted forward with the sword and the spear, with the sword and the spear,

Fell, the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 Boy and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,

Hedged the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, Alas, the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 stood!

The sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 Alas, the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,

Ruined the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 Alas, the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,

Like the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 Like the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,

Like the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 Like the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,

Like the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 Like the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,

Like the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 Like the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 pale,

Like the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 Like the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,

Done the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 Done the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,

We need warrior and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 We need warrior and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,

Soldiers' sword and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 Soldiers' sword and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,

Cast the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,
 Cast the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear, and the sword and the spear,

Arjun from a field at distance, where upon that day he fought,
With the ever faithful Krishna now his nightly shelter sought,

"Wherefore, Krishna," uttered Arjun, "evil omens strike my eye, Thoughts of sadness fill my bosom, wake the long forgotten sigh,

Where the voice of evening bugle speaks not on the battle-field,
Merry conch nor sounding trumpet music to the warriors' yield?

Happily he'd where the dark tents and the voice of warlike song, Bards beside the evening camp-fire tales of war do not prolong,

Good Yudhishta's tent is voiceless and his brother's look too pale, Abhimanyu's come not joyous Krishna and his sire to hail,

Albino's love and greeting, like the blessings from above, Fair Sahadru's joy and treasure, Arjun's pride and hope and love!"

Southward with many tear drops did the old Yudhishtir tell,
How in dreadful field of battleillant Abhimanyu fell,

How the mission Jayadratha led on Arjun's youthful son,
He with six proud Kuru chieftains, Arjun alone all alone,

How the young prince fell on the open field pierced by steel and
car,

How he fell, Krishna's name no more on the field of war!

Arjun heard; the father's bosom felt the cruel careless wound,
"Pray and valiant boy!" he uttered as he sank upon the ground.

Moments passed of voiceless sorrow and of speechless bitter tear,
Sons within his folded bosom smote the weeping listener's ear

Moments passed; with rising anger quivered Arjun's iron frame, Abhimanyu's cruel murder smote the father's heart to flame,

"Didst thou say that Sindhu's monarch on my Abhimanyu bore,
He alone,—and Jayadratha leagued with six marauders more,

Didst thou say the impious Kurus stooped unto this deed of shame,
Ourselves on the laws of honour, stain upon a warrior's fame?

Father's curse and woman's hatred sting them to their dying breath.

For they feared my boy in battle, hunted him to cruel death,

Hear my vow, Krishna, Yama's foe, hear me, Krishna righteous
lord,

Arjun's hand shall slay the foe, Arjun plight his solemn word!

May I never reach the bright day where the righteous fathers dwell,

May I with the darkest sinners live within the deepest hell, -

With the men who slay their fathers, shed their loving mothers' blood,

Scum the sacred bed of cows, tread on gold and holy food,

Chide I envy, cheat their kinsmen, speak the low and dastard lie,

For ere comes to-morrow's sunset, Jayadratha doth not die,

Jayadratha dies to-morrow, victim to my vengeful ire,

Arjun else shall yield his weapons, perish on the flaming pyre!"

Softer tear drops wept the mother, joyless was Subhadra's life, -

Krishna's fair and honoured sister, Arjun's dear and loved wife:

"Do not thou lie on bed of battle smeared with dust and foeman's gore,

Child of light and love and sweetness whom thy hapless mother bore,

Soft thank eyes beading lotus, sweet and gentle was thy face,

Are those soft eyes closed in slumber, faded is that peerless grace,

And thy limbs so young and tender on the bare earth do they lie,

Where the hungry-faced prowl and the vulture flutters vain,

Gold and jewel on all thy limbs, gems beaded thy hair and Doth the crimson mark of love decorate that weak breast?

Rend Subhadra's stony bosom with a mother's endless grief,

Let her follow Abhimanyu and in death obtain relief,

Earth to me void and cheerless, joyless is my hearth and home, Dreary without Abhimanyu is this weary world to me!"

And oh ! cheerless is that young heart, Abhimanyu's princess-wife,
What can sad Subhndra offer to her joyless sunless life,

Close our life in equal darkness for our day on earth is done,
For our love and light and treasure, Abhimanyu, he is gone !”

Long bewailed the anguished mother, fair Draupadi tore her hair, Matsya's princess early widowed shed her young heart's blood in tear !

STANDARDS OF THE KURUS. ARJUN'S REVENGE

Morning from the face of battle night's depending curtain drew,
Long and shrill his sounding sankha then the wrathful Arjun blew,

Kurus knew the vow of Arjun, heard the sankha's deathful blare,
As it rose above the red field, thrilled the startled morning air, “Speed, my Krishna,” out spake Arjun, as he held aloft his bow,

“For to day my task is dreadful, cruel is my mighty vow !”

Fery coursers urged by Krishna flew with lightning's rapid course, Dashing through the hostile warriors and the serried Kuru force,

Brave Durmarsan faced the hero but he strove and fought in vain,
Onward thundered Arjun's chariot o'er the dying and the slain,

Fierce Duhsasan with his tuskers rushed into the line of war,
But the tuskers broke in panic, onward still went Arjun's car !

Drona then, the proud preceptor, Arjun's furious progress stayed.
Tear-drops filled the eye of Arjan as these gentle words he said :

“Pardon, father, it tny pupil shuns to-day thy ordered war,
’Gainst his Abhimanyu's slayer Arjan speeds his battle-car,

Not against my great acharya is my wrathful bow-string drawn,
Not against a loved father fights a loving duteous son !

Heavy on this bleeding bosom sits the darkening load of woe,
And an injured father's vengeance seeks the slaughtered hero's foe,

Paid on then in morning. Arjun seeks a mangled hand war,
 And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail."

Paid on then in morning. Arjun seeks a mangled hand war,
 And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail,
 of war,

Paid on then in morning. Arjun seeks a mangled hand war,
 And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,

Paid on then in morning. Arjun seeks a mangled hand war,
 And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,
 course,

On the hill with the peak of the mountain, Arjun's battle
 For the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,

And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,
 And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,
 nt,

And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,
 And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,

And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,
 And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,

And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,
 And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,

And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,
 And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,

And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,
 And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,

And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,
 And the first of Arjun, clad in his golden mail, of war,

Came on him the Kurus warriors, darksome wave succeeding wave, Standards decked with strange devices, streamers of many hues,
 brave,

Foremost was the glorious standard of preceptor Drona's son,
Lion's tail in golden brilliance on his battle-chariot shone,

Elephant's rope was Karna's ensign made of rich and burnished
gold,

And a bull bedecked the standard of the bowman Kripa bold,

Peacock made of precious metal, decked with jewels rich and rare,
Vishmana's noble standard shone aloft serene and fair,

Ploughshare of a golden lustre shining like the radiant flame,
Spoke the car of mighty Salva, Madra's king of warlike fame,

Far and guarded well by chieftains shone the dazzling silver boar, Ensign proud of Jayadratha brought from Sindhu's sounding shore,

On the car of Somadatta shone a stake of sacrifice,
Silver boat and golden parrots, these were Salwa's proud device,

Last and brightest of the standards, on the prince Duryodhan's car, Lordly elephant in jewels proudly shone above the war !

Nine heroic Kuru chieftains, bravest warriors and the best, Leagued they came to grapple Arjun and on faithful Krishna pressed,

Arjun swept like sweeping whirlwind all resistless in his force,
Sought no foe and waged no combat, held his ever onward course,

For he sighted Jayadratha midst the circling chiefs of war,
'Gainst that warrior, grim and silent, Arjun drove his furious car !

Now the day-god rolled his chariot on the western clouds aflame, Karna's self and five great chieftains round brave Jayadratha came,

Vainly strove the valiant Arjun struggling 'gainst the Kuru line,
Charged upon the peerless Karna as he marked the day's decline,

Krishna then a prayer whispered ; came a friendly sable cloud,
Veiled the red sun's dazzling brilliance in a dark and inky shroud !

Karna deemed the closing darkness now proclaimed the close of strife,

Failing in his plighted promise Arjun must surrender life,

And his comrade chiefs rejoicing slackened in their toils of fight, Jayadratha hailed with gladness thickening shades of welcome night !

In that sad and fatal hour did the Kauru chiefs combine,
 And quick a host of heroes took side then all unguarded line.

Like an onrushing wind sweeping wildfire's flaming foam its boiling tongue
 On the startled Jayadratha, Arjuna fell's fiery thing !

Short the strife : as an ivy-leon swoops upon its helpless prey,
 Arjuna sped his venom'd arrow and his roeman luckless lay.

Friendly winds removed the dark cloud from the reddening western hill,

And the sun in crimson lustre cast its fiery radiance still !

But the evening's mantling darkness fell o'er distant hill and plain,
 Proud Duryodhan's many brothers were by vengeful Bhima slain.

And Duryodhan stung by sorrow waged the still unceasing fight,
 In the thick and gathering darkness torches lit the gloom of night.

Karna famous in his anger for his Jayadratha slain,
 And for brothers of Duryodhan sleeping lifeless on the plain.

'Gainst the gabant son of Bhima drove his deep resounding car,
 And in gloom and midnight darkness waled the echoes of the
war !

Bhima's son brave Ghatotkacha twice the steeds of Karna slew, Twice the humbled steedless Karna from the dubious battle flew.

Came again the fiery Karna, vengeance flamed within his heart,
 Like the midnight's lurid lightning sped his fell and fatal dart.

Woeful was the hour of darkness, luckless was the starry sway, Bhima's son in youth and valour lifeless on the red field lay !

Then was closed the midnight battle, silent shone the starry light, Bhima knew nor rest nor slumber through the long and woeful night !

FALL OF DRONA

As the crimson morning glittered proud Duryodhan sad at heart,
To the leader of the Kurus aid his sorrows thus impart :

"Sad y speeds the contest, Drona, on the battle's gory plain,
Kuru chiefs are thinned and fallen and my brothers mostly slain,

Can it be, O best of Brahmins, peerless in the art of war,
Can it be that we shall falter while thou speed'st the battle car ?

Panda's sons are but thy pupils, Arjun meets thee not in fight, None can face the great acharya in his wrath and warlike might,

Wherefore then in every battle are the Kuru chieftains slain, Wherefore lie my warlike brothers lifeless on the ghastly plain ?

Is it that the fates of battle 'gainst the Kuru house combine,
Is it that thy heart's affection unto Panda's sons incline,

If thy secret love and mercy suit the sons of Panda claim, Yield thy place to gallant Karna, Arjuna's prince of warlike fame !"

Answered Drona brief and wrathful : "Fair Gandhari's royal son, Reapest thou the gory harvest of thy sinful actions done,

Cast no blame in youth's presumption or a warrior's fleecy hair, Fiducial unto death is Drona to his promise plighted fair !

Ask thyself, O prince Duryodhan, bound by battle's sacred laws, Wherefore fightest not with Arjun for thy house and for thy cause,

Ask the dark and deep Sakuni, where is now his low device,
Wherefore wields he not his weapon as he wields the loaded dice,

Ask the chief who proudly boasted, archer Arjun he would slay, Helmed Arjun sways the battle, whither now doth Karna stay ?

Know the truth : the gallant Arjun hath no peer on earth below,
And no warrior breathes, Duryodhan, who can face thy helmed foe,

Drum-beats now have ceased duty, and 'tis willed by Heaven on high, Arjun or preceptor Drona shall in this day's battle die!"

Now the Sun in crimson splendour roiled his car of glistening gold, Scattered shafts of purple radiance on the plain and mountain bold,

And from deeps of earth and ether, from each bravely bannered car,
 Lighted mailed horses and chieftains and the leaders of the war,

Faced the sun with limbs composed and the sacred mantra told,
 Hymns by ancient Manu ordained, sanctioned by bards of old!

Work was done, each able warrior mounted on his car or steed,
 Obedient to the death-decreed did his gallant forces lead,

It faced with Parthava forces, deathly Drona took the field, Peer was none mid moving warriors of the Brahman trained and skilled,

Arjun, faithful to his preceptor, his preceptor would not fight, Kray not chief nor other archer dared to face his peerless might

But old feud like potent poison fires the warrior's heart with rage,
 Son to son still untrodden keeps the hate from death to life,

Wrathful princes of Parichit by their deathless hatred stung,
 Saw their preceptor slain in Drona and on him for vengeance sprung

Darkly brought the ancient warrior of the old relentless race, Fiercely like a purple river fell upon the hostile brood,

Royal Drupad's valiant grandsons in their youth untimely slain,
 Victims of a deathless discord, pressed the gory battle-plain!

Drupad pale with grief and anger marked his gallant grandsons
dead,

And his army crashed and routed, and his bravest chieftains fled.

Filled with untrodden hatred and with father's grief and pride, Rushed the king, and bold Virata charged by doleful Drupad's side!

Rose a cry of nameless terror o'er the red and ghastly plain,
 Noble Drupad, brave Virata, lay among the countless slain.

But no tears the proud Draupadi wept for noble father killed,
 Mad and maddened with then waiting fair Panchala's empire filled, Mousa's joyless widowed princess, for her fate was early crost,
 Wept with added tears and anguish for her father loved and lost !
 And the war with fearful slaughter, Drona onward urged his way,
 But soon and battle's chances changed the fortunes of the day,
 Aswa-thaman son of Drona was a chief of peerless fame,
 And an elephant of battle bore that chieftain's warlike name,
 And that proud and lordly tusker Bhima in his prowess slew, Rank to rank from friend to foeman then a garbled message flew :
 "Aswa-thaman son of Drona is by mighty Bhima slain," Drona heard that fatal message, bent his anguished head in pain !
 "Speak Yudhishthir, soul of virtue !" thus the proud preceptor
 cried,
 "Thou in truth hast never faltered and thy lips have never lied,
 Speak of valiant Aswa-thaman, Drona's hope and pride and joy,
 Hark he fallen in this battle, is he slain, my gallant boy,
 Feeble are the hands of Drona and his prowess quenched and gone, Hasty are his ancient tresses and his earthly task is done !"

Said Yudhishthir thus in answer : "Tusker Aswa-thaman's dead," Drona heard but half the accents, feebly drooped his sinking head,
 Then the prince of fair Panchala swiftly drove across the plain,
 Marked his father's cruel slayer, marked his noble father slain !
 Drista-dyumna bent his weapon and his shaft was pointed well,
 And the priest and proud preceptor, peerless Drona lifeless fell,
 And the fatal day was ended, Kurus fled in abject fear, Arjun for his ancient teacher dropped a silent filial tear !

BOOK X

KARNA-BADHHA

(Fall of Karna)

Karna was chosen as the leader of the Kuru forces after the death of Drona, and held his own for two days. The great contest between Karna and Arjun, long expected and long deferred, came on at last. It is the crowning incident of the Indian Epic, as the contest between Hector and Achilles is the crowning incident of the Iliad. With a truer artistic skill than that of Homer, the Indian poet represents Karna as equal to Arjun in strength, skill, and his defeat is only due to an accident.

After the death of Karna, Savit led the Kuru troops on the eighteenth and last day of the war, and fell. A midnight slaughter in the Pandav camp, perpetrated by the vengeful son of Drona, concludes the war. Duryodhan, left wounded by Bhîma, meets the slaughter and died happy.

Books viii., ix., and x. of the original have been abridged in this Book.

KARNA AND ARJUN MEET.

Sights of red and ghastly carnage day disclosed upon the plain, Mighty clanks and countless warriors round the walled Drona
slain,

Sad Duryodhan stood in sorrow and perplexity on his knees, Till his charcer told him Karna and his warlike son were near.

"Karna!" so exclaimed Duryodhan, "yet once more come forth, Thou alone canst save the Kuru in this dire and bloody hour."

Step forth, Kuru's chief and leader, mount thy sword and spear, Lead the still unconquered Kurus to the trophies of the war.

Matchless was the ancient Bhishma in this famed and warlike land,
But a weakness for Yudhishthir palsied Bhishma's slaying hand,

Matchless too was doughty Drona in the warrior's skill and art, Kindness for his pupil Arjun lurked within the teacher's heart !

Greater than the ancient grandsire, greater than the Brahman old,
Fiercer in the deathless hatred, stronger in thy prowess bold,

Pierces Karna, lead us onward to a brighter happier fate,
For thy arm is nerved to action by an unforgotten hate !

Lead us as the martial SKANDYA led the conquering gods of old,
Smite the foe as angry INDRA smote the Danavs fierce and bold,

As before the light of morning flies the baleful gloom of night, Pandavs and the proud Pandulas fly before thy conquering
might !"

Priests with hymns and chanted mantra and with every sacred rite Hailed him Leader of the Kurus, chieftain of unconquered might,

Earthen jars they placed around him with the sacred water full,
Elephant's tusk they laid beside him and the horn of mighty bull,

Gem and jewel, corn and produce, by the armed hero laid,
Silken cloth of finest lustre o'er his crown'd head they spread,

Brahmans poured the holy water, bards his lofty praises sung, Kshattras, Vaisyas, purer Sudras hailed him Leader bold and strong !

"Vanquish warlike sons of Pritha !" thus the holy Brahmans blessed,

Gold and garments, food and cattle, joyous Karna on them pressed,

And the holy rite concluded, Karna ranged his men in war,
To the dreaded front of battle drove his swift and conquering car !

Morn to noon and noon to evening raged the battle on the plain, Countless warriors fought and perished, car borne chiefs were pierced and slain,

Helmed Arjun, crown'd Karna, met at last by will of fate,
Life-long was their mutual anger, deathless was their mutual hate !

And the firm earth shook and trembled 'neath the furious rush of
 war,
 And the echoing welkin answered shouts that nations heard afar,
 And the thickening cloud of arrows filled the firmament on high,
 Darker, deeper, dread and deadlier, grew the angry face of sky,
 Till the evening's sable garment mantled o'er the battle-field,
 And the angry rivals parted, neither chief could win or yield !

FALL OF KARNA

At the break of morning Karna unto Prince Duryodhan went, Thus in slow and measured accents to his inner thoughts gave vent :

' Morning dawns, O Kuru's monarch ! mighty Arjun shall be slain,
 On fulfilling warrior's duty Karna dyes the gory plain !

Long through life within our bosoms ever burnt the mutual hate,
 Oft we met and often parted, rescued by the will of fate,

But yon sun with crimson lustre sees us meet to part no more,
 Gallant Arjun's course this evening or proud Karna's shall be o'er.

Room is none for Arjun's glory and for archer Karna's fame,
 One must sink and one must sparkle with a brighter richer flame !

List yet more ; in wealth of arrows and in wondrous strength of bow,

Arjun scarcely me surpasseth, scarcely I excel my foe,

In the light skill of the archer and in sight and truth of aim,
 Arjun beats not, scarcely rivals, Karna's proud and peerless fame !

If his wondrous bow Gandiva is the gift of gods in heaven,
 Karna's bow the famed Uchaisravina is by Par'su-Rama given,

Ay, the son of Jamadagni, kings of earth who proudly slaved,
 On the youthful arms of Karna his destructive weapon laid !

Yet I own, O King of Kuru! Arjun doth but too excel, Matchless are his fiery coursers, peerless Krishna leads them well.

Krishna holds the reins for Arjun, Krishna speeds his battle car, Drives the lightning-winged courier o'er the startled field of war,

Sweep in peak his sounding chariot till it almost seems to fly,
 Arjun hurls his bolts like the comet in the sky!

Grant me, O monarch, I beseech, Salya drive my swift and warlike steed,

And against the car-borne Arjun, Karna's fiery chariot lead,

Salya too is skilled, like Krishna, with the steed and battle car,
 I grieve that I meet not a foe man in this hot and fatal war!"

Spoke Duryodhan; warlike Salya mounted Karna's sounding car, Karna so forth to meet him Arjun in the settled ranks of war:

"Hundred mace-kine Karna offers, costly garment, yellow gold,
 Unto him who in this battle plants to me my foeman bold,

Cars and steeds and fertile acres, peaceful hamlets rich and fair,
 Dark-eyed damsels lotus-bosomed, crowned with glossy raven hair,

These are his who points out Arjun hiding from this fatal way, Arjun's snowy steed and banner and his swift and thund'ring car!"

Karna spoke, but long; and loudly laughed the king of Madra's land,

As he reined the fiery coursers with his strong and skillful hand,

"Of rewards and gifts," he uttered, "little need is there, I ween, Arjun is not to get to fly from the battle's glorious scene,

Soon will Arjun's snowy coursers shake the battle's startled field, Helmed Arjun like a comet gleam with bow and sword and shield!"

As the forest-ranging tiger springs upon his fated prey,
 As the horned bull intimate down the weakening cattle slay,

As the fierce and lordly lion snatches the timid jungle-deer, Arjun soon shall snatch thee, Karna, for he knows not dread nor fear,

Save thee then, O mighty archer ! while I drive my sounding car, Pandu's son hath met no equal in the valiant art of war !”

Darkly frowned the angry Karna, Silva held the loosened rein, Dashing through the hostile lines : then the warrior sped again,

Through the serried ranks of battle : Karna drove in furious mood, Facing him in royal splendour good Yudhishtir fearless stood !

Surgin' ranks of brave Nashados closed between and fought in vain,

Proud Panchalas stout and faithful vainly strove among the slabs,

Onward came the hero Karna like the ocean's heaving swell,
With the sweeping wrath of tempest on the good Yudhishtir fell :

Wrathful then the son of Panda marked his noblest chieftains dead,
And in words of scornful anger thus to archer Karna said :

“ Hast thou, Karna, vowed the slaughter of my younger Arjun
brave,

Wilt thou do Duryodhan's mandate, proud Duryodhan's willing slave,

Unfulfilled thy vow remaineth, for the righteous gods ordain,
By Yudhishtir's hand thou talkest, so and slumber with the slain !”

Hereck drew his bow Yudhishtir, fiercely was the arrow driven, Rocky cliff or solid mountain might the shaft have pierced and riven,

Lightning-like it came on Karna, struck and pierced him on the left,

And the warrior fell and fainted as of life and sense bereft !

Soon he rose : the cloud of anger darkened o'er his livid face,
And he drew his godlike weapon with a more than godlike grace.

Arrows keen and dark as midnight gleaming in their lightning flight,

Struck Yudhishtir's royal armour with a fierce resistless might !

Clanking fell the shattered armour from his person fair and pale,
As from sun's meridian splendour clouds are drifted by the gale,

Armourless but bright and radiant brave Yudhishtir waged the fight,
 Bright as sky with stars bespangled on a clear and cloudless night,
 And he threw his pointed lances like the summer's bursting flood,
 Once again Yudhishtir's weapons drank his fiery foeman's blood !

But with anguish, wrathful Karna fiercely turned the tide of war,
 Cut Yudhishtir's royal standard, crushed his sumptuous battle-car,
 And he urged his gallant coursers till his chariot bounding flew,
 And with more than godlike prowess then his famed Vijaya drew,

Faint Yudhishtir sorely bleeding waged no more the fatal fight, Careless, steedless, void of armour, sought his safety in his flight !

"Speed, thou timid man of penance !" thus insulting Karna said,
 'Famed for virtue not for valour ! blood of thine I will not shed, Speed and chant thy wonted mantra, do the rites that sages know, Bid the helméd warrior Arjun come and meet his warlike foe !"

To his tent retired Yudhishtir in his wrath and in his shame, Spoke to Arjun who from battle to his angry elder came :

"Hast thou yet, O tardy Arjun, base insulting Karna slain, Karna dealing dire destruction on this battle's reddened plain ?

Like his teacher Par'su-Rama dyes in purple blood his course,
 Like a snake of deathful poison Karna guards the Kuru force,

Karna smote my chariot-driver and my standard rent in twain,
 Scattered car and lifeless horses strew the red inglorious plain,

Scarcely with life in speechless anguish from the battle field I fled, Scorn of foes and shame of kinsmen ! Warrior's fame and honour dead !

Ten long years and three Yudhishtir joy nor peace nor rest hath seen,

And while Karna lives and glories all our insults still are green,

Hast thou, Arjun, slain that chieftain as in swelling pride he stood, Hast thou wiped our wrongs and insults in that chariot-driver's blood ?"

"At a distance," Krishna answered, "thy Arjun sought his way, Now he seeks the archer Karna and he vows his death to-day."

Arjun hit Yudhishtira's forehead and a thorn struck his brain,
As he spoke to smite Arjun words of in ear and of shame:

"Why thou like a painted woman dost conceal Arjun's steel,
Why thou useless lies Gandiva in his vain and nerveless hand,

Why thou dost conceal thy brother's belt of death, Why thou dost hide the peacock's Krishna and the conser that are bold,

If thou from view'st Arjun and Arjun seeks to hide,
If he stands the matchless Karna bold in unconquered pride:

Arise! yield thy famed Gandiva unto worthier hands than mine,
On some braver true warrior let thy noble standard shine,

Yield thy helmet and thy armour, yield thy gleaming sword and shield,

Hide thee from this deathful battle, matchless Karna rules the field!"

Sparkled Arjun's eye in anger with a red and livid flame,
And the tempest of his passion strook his more than mortal frame.

Heedless, on the sword-hilt Arjun placed his swift and trembling hand,

Heedless, with a warrior's instinct drew the dark and glistening,
 brand!

Sacred blood of king and elder would have stained his trenchant steel,

But the wise and noble Krishna strove the wild deed to head:

"Not before thy elder, Arjun, but in vonder purple field,

'Gainst thy rival and thy kinsman use thy warlike sword and shield!"

Render honour to thy elder, quench thy hasty impulse with,

Render faith to holy sages, leave not virtue's sacred path,

Bow before thy virtuous elder as before the gods in heaven,

Sheathe thy sword and quell thy passion, be thy hasty sin forgiven!"

Duteous Arjun silent listened and obeyed the mandate high,
Tears of manly sorrow trickled from his soft and altered eye,

Dear in joy and dear in suffering, dear his mother's elder son,
Dear in Indra-prastha's mansions, dearer in the jungle wood!

Arjun sheathed his slaying sabre, joined his hands and hang his head,

Fixed his eye on good Yudhishthir and in humble accents said:

"Pardon, great and saintly monarch, vassal's disrespectful word,
Pardon, elder, if a younger heedless drew his vital sword,

But thy best to yield my weapon stung my soul to bitter stung,
Dearer is the low Gandiva unto Arjun than his life,

Pardon if the flood of anger mantled o'er this rugged brow,
Pardon if I drew my sabre 'gainst my duty and my vow,

For that hasty act repenting Arjun bows thy heart to move, Grant me, holy king and elder, monarch's grace and brother's love!"

From Yudhishthir's altered eyelids gentle tears of sorrow start,
And he lifts his younger brother to his ever-loving heart:

"Arjun, I have wronged thee brother, and no fault or sin is thine, Hasty words of thoughtless anger 'scaped these sinful lips of mine,

Deeper was my shame and anguish when from Karna's car I fled, Redder than my bleeding bosom warrior's fame and honour bled,

Hasty words I uttered, Arjun, by my pain and anguish driven, Wipe them with a brother's kindness, be thy elder's sin forgiven!"

Stronger by his elder's blessing Arjun mounts the battle-car, Kriшна dresses the milk-white chariots to the thickening ranks of
war.

Onward came the fiery Karna with his chariots and armed men,
Salya urged his flying couriers with the whip and loosened rein.

Often met and often parted, He long dwells in their fame,
Not to part again the heroes, each before the other came,

Not to part until a chieftain by the other chief was slain,
 Arjun dead or lifeless Karna pressed the Kurukshetra plain !

Long they strove, but neither archer could his gallant toeman best,
 Though like surging ocean billows did the angry warriors meet,

Arjun's arrows fell on Karna like the summer's angry flood,
 Karna's shafts like hissing serpents drank the valiant Arjun's blood !

Fierce and quick from his Gandiva angry accents Arjun woke, Till the bow string strained and heated was by sudden impulse broke !

"Hold," cried Arjun to his rival, "mind the honoured rules of war, Warriors strike not helpless toemen thus disabled on the car,

Hold, brave Karna, until Arjun mend his over strained bow, Arjun then will crave for mercy nor from god nor mortal foe !"

Van he spake, for wild with anger heedless Karna fiercely lowered Thick and fast on bowless Arjun countless arrows dark showered,

Like the cobra dark and hissing Karna's gleaming lightning dart,
 Struck the helpless archer Arjun on his broad and bleeding heart !

Lamour like a wounded tiger quivering in the darksome wood,
 With his mended warlike weapon now the angry Arjun stood,

Blazing with a mighty radiance like a flame in summer night, Fierce he fell on archer Karna with his more than mortal might !

Little recked the dauntless Karna if his foe in anger rose,
 Karna feared not foe of mortal, dreaded not immortal foes,

Nor with all his wrath and valour Arjun conquered him in war,
 Till within the soft earth sinking stuck the wheel of Karna's car

Stood unmoved the tilted chariot, vainly wrathful Salva strove, Urging still the struggling coursers Karna's heavy car to move,

Vainly too the gallant Karna leaped up on the humid soil,
 Sought to lift the sunken axle with a hard unwonted toil,

"Hold," he cried to noble Arjun, "wage no false and impious war,
On a foeman, helpless, carless, -thou upon thy lofty car."

Loudly laughed the helméd Arjun, answer nor rejoinder gave, Unto Karna pleading virtue Krishna answered calm and gave :

"Didst thou seek the path of virtue, mighty Karna, archer bold,
When Sakun robbed Yudhishtir of his empire and his gold,

Didst thou tread the path of honour on Yudhishtir's fatal fall, Heaping insults on Draupadi in Hastina's council hall ?

Didst thou then fulfil thy duty when, Yudhishtir's exile crost, Krishna asked in right and justice for Yudhishtir's empire lost,

Didst thou fight a holy battle when with six marauders skilled,
Karna hunted Abhimanyu and the youthful hero killed ?

Speak not then of rules of honour, blackened in your sins you die,
Death is come in shape of Arjun, Karna's fatal hour is nigh !"

Stung to fury and to madness, faint but frantic Karna fought,
Reckless ruthless and relentless, valiant Arjun's life he sought,

Sent his last resistless arrow on his foeman's mighty chest,
Arjun felt a shock of thunder on his broad and mailed breast !

Fainting fell the bleeding Arjun, darkness dimmed his manly eye, Pak and breathless watched his warriors, anxious watched the gods in sky,

Then it passed, and helméd Arjun rose like newly lighted fire, Abhimanyu's sad remembrance kindled fresh a father's ire !

And he drew his bow Gandiva, aimed his dart with stifled breath, Vengeance for his murdered hero winged the fatal dart of death,

Like the fiery bolt of lightning Arjun's lurid arrow sped,
Like a rock by thunder riven Karna fell among the dead !

FALL OF SALYA

Darkly coming from the forest, Kripa, the sage,
 A sickly ray, of light, shed from the north,
 Sickly ray,

Down in the valley, a preceptor, Kripa, to Duryodhan,
 Fear he had of the Kurus, and the Pandus, and the Kauravas.

Lead the Kurus, Kripa, to a dead end, a dead end,
 Like the monkeys, dead, of the forest, their utter death.

Take a dead end, a dead end, a dead end, a dead end,
 Lest a dead end of the Kurus, a dead end, a dead end.

As a spear of the Kurus, a spear of the Kurus, Kripa's death, a death, a death, a death, a death.

Blhina too shall seek fulfillment of the dreadful vow he made,
 Brave Satyaki wreak his vengeance for his sons unfairly slain.

Bid this battle cease, Duryodhan, pale and awful is thy star,
 Blood enough of friendly nations soaks this crimson field of war.

Bid them live, the few survivors of a vast and countless host,
 Let thy few remaining brothers live, for many are the lost.

Kindly heart hath good Yudhishthira, still he seeks for friendly peace, Render back his ancient kingdom, bid this war of kinsmen cease.

"Kripa," said Duryodhan answered, "in this sad and fearful time,
 Ever more lost of the Kurus, ever more lost of thy line,

Ever more lost of the Kurus, ever more lost of thy line,
 Needle's eye and the destruction of the Kurus, a dead end.

Every word thou speakest, Kripa, is a word of truth and love, Naughtless thy advice for counsel, wise preceptor, comes to me.

Hope not that the good Yudhishthira will regain our friendship,
 Cheated once by deep Sakuni of his kingdom and his throne,

Rugged Bhima wil not palter, fatal is the vow he made,
Venerful Arjun wil not pardon gallant Abhimanyu dead !

Fair Draupadi doth her penance, so our ancient matrons say,
In our blood to wash her insult and her proud insulters slay,

Fair Subhadra morn and evening weeps her dear departed son,
Feeds Draupadi's deathless anger for the hero dead and gone,

Deeply in their bosoms rankle wrongs and insults we have given,
Blood alone can wash it, Kripa, such the cruel will of Heaven !

And the hour for peace is over, for our best sleep on the plain, Brothers, kinsmen, friends, and elders slumber with the countless
slain,

Shall Duryodhan like a recreant now avoid the deathful strife,
After all his bravest warriors have in war surrendered life,

Shall he, sending them to slaughter, now survive and learn to flee, Shall he, ruler over monarchs, learn to bend the servile knee ?

Proud Duryodhan sues no favour even with his dying breath, Unsubdued and still unconquered, changeless even unto death,

Salva valiant king of Madra leads our armed hosts to-day,
Or to perish or to conquer, gallant Kripa, lead the way !"

Meanwhile round brave Yudhishthir calmly stood the Pandav force,
As the final day of battle now began its fatal course,

"Brothers, kinsmen, hero-warriors," so the good Yudhishthir said,
"Ye have done your share in battle, witness countless foemen dead,

Sid Yudhishthir is your eldest, let him end this fatal strife,
Slay the last of Kuru chieftains or surrender throne and life !

Bold Satyaki ever faithful with his arms protects my right, Drapad's son with watchful valour guards my left with wonted
might,

In the front doth Bhima battle, careful Arjun guards the rear, I will lead the battle's centre which shall know nor flight nor fear !"

Truly on that fatal morning brave Yudhishtir kept his word,
Long and fiercely waged the combat with fair Madra's valiant lord,

Thick and fast the arrows whistled and the lances pointed well,
Till with crashing sound of thunder Salva's mighty standard fell !

Rescued by the son of Drona, Salva rushed again to war,
Slew the noble milk-white coursers of Yudhishtir's royal car,

And as springs the hungry lion on the spotted jungle-deer,
Salva rushed upon Yudhishtir reckless and unknown to fear !

Brave Yudhishtir marked him coming and he hurled his fatal dart,
Like the fatal curse of Brahma sank the weapon in his heart,

Blood suffused his eye and nostril, quivered still his feeble hand,
Like a child by thunder riven Salva fell and shook the land !

Ended was the fatal battle, for the Maharaja king was slain, Pierced by angry Sahadeva false Sakuni pressed the plain,

All the brothers of Duryodhan tiger-waisted Bhima slew, Proud Duryodhan pale and panting from the field of battle flew !

NIGHT OF SLAUGHTER : DURYODHAN'S DEATH

Far from battle's toil and slaughter, by a dark and limpid lake, Sad and slow and faint Duryodhan did his humble shelter take.

But the valiant sons of Pandu with the hunter's watchful care, Thither tracked their fallen foe-man like a wild beast in its lair !

"Gods be witness," said Duryodhan, flaming in his shame and wrath,

"Boy to manhood ever hating we have crossed each other's path

Now we meet to part no longer, proud Duryodhan fights we all, Perish he, or sons of Pandu, may this evening see your fall !"

Bhima answered : "For the insults long endured but not forgiven, Me alone you fight, Duryodhan, witness righteous gods in heaven !"

FALL OF KARNA

Call to mind the dark destruction planned of old in fiendish ire,
In the halls of Varnavata to consume us in the fire,

Call to mind the scheme deceitful, deep Sakuni's dark device,
Cheating us of fame and empire by the trick of loaded dice,

Call to mind that coward insult and the outrage foul and keen,
Hurling on Drupad's saintly daughter and our noble spotless queen,

Call to mind the stainless Bhishma for thy sins and folly slain,
Lifeless proud preceptor Drona, Karna lifeless on the plain,

Perish in thy sins, Duryodhan, perish too thy hated name,
And thy dark life crime-polluted ends, Duryodhan, in thy shame !”

Like two bulls that fight in fury blind with wounds and oozing blood,

Like two wild and warring tusked shaking all the echoing wood,

Like the thunder-wielding INDRA, YAMA monarch of the dead, Dauntless Bhima and Duryodhan fiercely strove and fought and bled !

Sparks of fire shot from their maces and their faces ran with blood, Neither won and neither yielded, matched in strength the rivals stood,,

All his vow remembered Bhima, and he raised his weapon high,
With a foul attack but fatal broke Duryodhan's shattered knee !

Through the sky a voice resounded as the great Duryodhan fell,
And the earth the voice re-echoed o'er her distant hill and dale,

Beasts and birds in consternation flew o'er land and azure sky,
Men below and heavenly Siddhas trembled at the fatal cry !

Darkness fell upon the battle, proud Duryodhan dying lay,
But the slaughter of the combat closed not with the closing day,

Ancient feud and hatred linger after battle's sweeping flood,
And the father's deathless anger courses in the children's blood,

Drona slept and gallant Drupad, for their earthly task was done,
Vengeance fired the son of Drona 'gainst the royal Drupad's son !

Sable shadows of the midnight fell o'er battle's silent plain,
Lambent stars and fatal planets on the dying and the slain,

And the vengeful son of Drona fired by omens dark and dread,
Stole into the tents of roe men with a soft and noiseless tread !

Dan to dyumna and Sukh ndra, princes of Panchala's land, Fell beneath the proud avenger Aswa-thaman's reeking hand,

Av, where Drupad's sleeping grandsons, fair Draupadi's children lay,

Stole the cruel arm of vengeance, smothered them ere dawn of day

Done the ghastly work of slaughter, Aswa-thaman bent his way,
Where beside the limpid waters lone Duryodhan dying lay,

And Duryodhan blessed the hero with his feeble fleeting breath,
Joy of vengeance cheered his bosom and he died a happy death !

BOOK XI
SRADDHA
(Funeral Rites)

The scene of Duryodhana includes the war, and it is followed by the lament of women and the funeral of the deceased warriors. The passage translated in this Book form Section x., portion of Sections xvi., xvii., and xviii., and the whole of Section xxvii. of Book xi. of the original text.

KURU WOMEN VISIT THE BATTLE FIELD

Spoke the ancient Dhritā-rashtra, father of a hundred sons, Sorrow-stricken and sorrow-stricken, dark his ebbing life-tide runs :

"Gods fulfil my life's last wishes ! Henchmen, yoke my royal car, Dhritā-rashtra meets his princes in the silent field of war,

Speed unto the Queen Gandhari, to the dames of Kuru's house,
To each dear departed warrior wends his fair and faithful spouse !"

Queen Gandhari sorrow-laden with the ancient Pritha came,
And each weeping widowed princess and each wailing childless dame,

And they saw the hoary monarch, father of a perished race, Fresh and loud awoke their sorrow, welling tears suffused their face,

Good Vidura ever gentle whispered comfort unto all,
Placed the dames within their chariots, left Hastina's palace hall !

Loud the wail of woe and sorrow rose from every Kuru house, Children wept beside their mothers for each widowed royal spouse,

Veiled dwellers of the palace, scarce the gods their face had seen, Heedless now through mart and city sped each widowed childless
 queen,

From their royal brow and bosom gem and jewel cast aside, Loose their robes and loose their tresses, quenched their haughty queenly pride !

So when falls the antlered monarch, struck by woe and sudden fear, Issuing from their snowy mountains listless stray the dappled deer.

So when smit by sudden panic, milk-white mares that scour the plain,

Wildly toss their flowing tresses, shake their soft and glossy mane !

Clinging to her weeping sister wept each dame in cureless pain,
 For the lord the son or father in the deathful battle slain,

Wept and smote her throbbing bosom and in bitter anguish wailed,
 Till her senses reeled in sorrow, till her woman's reason failed !

Veiled queens and bashful maidens, erst they shunned the public eye,

Blush nor shame suffused their faces as they passed the city by,

Gentle-bosomed, kindly hearted, erst they wiped each other's tears.
 Now by common sorrow laden knew no sister's words of cheer

With this troop of wailing women, deep in woe, disconsolate, Slow the monarch of the Kurus passed Hastina's outer gate,

Men from stall and loom and anvil, men of every guild and trade,
 Left the city with the monarch, through the open country strayed.

And a universal sorrow filled the air and answering sky,
 As when ends the mortal's Yuga and the end of world is nigh !

GANDHARI'S LAMENT FOR THE SLAIN

Stainless Queen and stainless woman, ever righteous ever good, Stately in her mighty sorrow on the field Gandhari stood !

Sown with skulls and clotted tresses, darkened by the stream of
gore,
With the limbs of countless warriors is the red field covered o'er,
Elephants and steeds of battle, car-borne chiefs untimely slain, Headless trunks and heads dis severed fill the red and ghastly plain,
And the long-drawn howl of jackals o'er the scene of carnage rings,
And the vulture and the raven flap their dark and loathsome wings,
Feasting on the blood of warriors toal Pisacas fill the air, Viewless forms of hungry Rakshas limb from limb the corpses tear !

Through this scene of death and carnage was the ancient monarch led,
Kuru dames with faltering footsteps stepped amidst the countless
dead,

And a piercing wail of anguish burst upon the echoing plain,
As they saw their sons or fathers, brothers, lords, amidst the slain,
As they saw the wolves of jungle feed upon the destined prey, Darksome wanderers of the midnight prowling in the light of day !
Shriek of pain and wail of anguish o'er the ghastly field resound,
And then feeble footsteps falter and they sink upon the ground,
Sense and life desert the mourners as they faint in common grief, Death-like swoon succeeding sorrow yields a moment's short relief !

Then a mighty sigh of anguish from Gandhari's bosom broke,
Going on her anguished daughters unto Krishna thus she spoke :

"Mark my unconsoléd daughters, widowed queens of Kuru's house,
Waiting for their dear departed, like the osprey for her spouse !

How each cold and fading feature wakes in them a woman's love,
How amidst the lifeless warriors still with restless steps they rove, Mothers hug their slaughtered children all unconscious in their sleep,
Widows bend upon their husbands and in ceaseless sorrow weep,

Mighty Blashm, hath he fallen, quenched is archer Karra's pride, Doth the monarch of Panchala sleep by then in Drona's side -

Shining mail and costly jewels, royal bangles strew the plain,
Golden garlands rich and burnished deck the chiefs untired slain,

Lances hurled by stalwart fighters, clubs of mighty wrestlers killed,
Swords and bows of ample measure, quivers still with arrows filled!

Mark the unforgotten heroes, jungle prowlers 'mid them stray,
On their brow and mailed bosoms heedless perch the birds of prey,

Mark the great unconquered heroes fanned on earth from west to east,

As As perch upon their torchheads, hungry wolves upon their rest!

Mark the kings, on softest cushion scarce the needed rest they found,

Now they lie in peaceful slumber on the hard and reddened ground,

Mark the youths who morn and evening listed to the minstrel's song,

In their ear the loathsome jackal doth his doleful wail prolong!

See the chieftains with their maces and their swords of trusty steel, Still they grasp their tried weapons, do they still the life pulse feel?"

GANDHARI'S LAMENT FOR DURYODHAN

Thus to Krishna, Queen Gandhari strove her woeful thoughts to tell,

When, alas, her wandering vision on her son Duryodhan fell,

Sudden anguish smote her bosom and her senses seemed to start,
Like a tree by tempest shaken senseless on the earth she lay!

Once again she waked in sorrow, once again she cast her eye,
Where her son in blood empurpled slept beneath the open sky.

And she clasped her dear Duryodhan, held him close unto her breast,
 Sob's convulsive shook her bosom as the lifeless form she prest,
 And her tears like rains of summer fell and washed his noble head, Decked with garlands still untarnished, graced with nishkas bright and red !

'Mother' said my dear Duryodhan when he went unto the war,
 'Wish me joy and wish me triumph as I mount the battle-car,'

'Son' I said to dear Duryodhan, 'Heaven avert a cruel fate, Vaśu dharma śata yajāt ! Triumph doth on Virtue wait !'

But he set his heart on battle, by his valour wiped his sins,
 Now he dwells in realms celestial which the faithful warrior wins,

And I weep not for Duryodhan, like a prince he fought and fell,
 But my sorrow-stricken husband, who can his misfortunes tell ?

'And my son was brave and princely, all resistless in the war, Now he sleeps the sleep of warriors, sunk in gloom his glorious star,

'And my son mid crownéd monarchs held the first and foremost
 way,

Now he rests upon the red earth, quenched his bright effulgent ray,

'And my son the best of heroes, he hath won the warrior's sky,
 He has nobly conquer, Krishna, when in war they nobly die !

Hark the loathsome cry of jackals, how the wolves their vigils keep,

Madams rich in song and beauty erst were wont to watch his sleep,

Hark the foul and blood-beaked vultures flap their wings upon the dead,

Medons waved their feathered śuklas round Duryodhan's royal bed,

Peerless bowmen ! mighty monarchs ! nations still his hosts obeyed,
 As a lion slays a tiger, Bhīma hath Duryodhan slayed !

Thirteen years o'er Kuru's empire proud Duryodhan held his sway, Ruled Hastina's ancient city where fair Ganga's waters stray,

I have seen his regal splendour with these ancient eyes of mine,
Elephants and battle-chariots, steeds of war and herds of kine,

Kuru owns another master and Duryodhan's day is fled,
And I live to be a witness ! Krishna, O that I were dead !

Mark Duryodhan's noble widow, mother proud of Lakshman b Queenly in her youth and beauty, like an altar of bright gold,

Torn from husband's sweet embraces, from her son's entwining arms,

Doomed to life long woe and anguish in her youth and in re charms,

Rend my hard and stony bosom crushed beneath this cruel pain,
Should Gandhari live to witness noble son and grandson slain ?

Mark again Duryodhan's widow, how she hugs his gory head,
How with gentle hands and tender softly holds him on his bed,

How from dear departed husband turns she to her dearer son,
And the tear-drops of the mother choke the widow's bitter groan

Like the fibre of the lotus tender-golden is her frame, O my lotus ! O my daughter ! Bharat's pride and Kuru's fame

If the truth resides in Vedas, brave Duryodhan dwell's above, Wherefore linger we in sadness severed from his cherished love.

If the truth resides in Sastra, dwells in sky my hero son,
Wherefore linger we in sorrow since their earthly task is done ?

FUNERAL RITE

Victor of a deathful battle, sad Yudhishthir viewed the plain, Friends and kinsmen, kings and chieftains, countless troops af-timely slain,

And he spake to wise Sudharman pious priest of Kuru's race,
Unto Sanjay, unto Dhaumya, to Vidura full of grace,

Spoke unto the brave Yuyutsu, Kuru's last surviving chief,
Spoke to faithful Indrasena and to warriors sunk in grief :

"Pious rites are due to foemen and to friends and kinsmen slain, None shall lack a fitting funeral, none shall perish on the plain."

Wise Vidura and his comrades sped on sacred duty bound, Sandalwood and scented aloes, fragrant oil and perfumes found,
Silken robes of costly splendour, fabrics by the artist wove,
Dry wood from the thorny jungle perfume from the scented grove,
Shattered cars and splintered lances, hewed and ready for the fire,
Piled and ranged in perfect order into many a funeral pyre.

Kings and princes, noble warriors, were in rank and order laid,
And with streams of fragrant ghrita were the rich libations made,

Blazed the fire with wondrous radiance by the rich libations fed, Sanctifying and consuming mortal remnants of the dead.

Brave Duryodhan and his brothers, Salya of the mighty car, Bhisma king of nations, Jayadratha famed in war,

Abhimanyu son of Arjun, Lakshman proud Duryodhan's son, Somedatta and the Srinjays famed for deeds of valour done,

Matsya's monarch proud Virata, Drupad fair Panchala's king,
And his sons, Panchala's princes, whose great deeds the minstrels sing,

Cultured monarch of Kosala and Gandhara's wily lord, Karna proud and peerless archer, matchless with his flaming sword,

Bhagadatta eastern monarch all resistless in his car,
Gatotkacha son of Bhima, Alambusha famed in war,

And a hundred other monarchs all received the pious rite,
Till the radiance of the fire-light chased the shadows of the night !

The medha due to fathers was performed with pious care,
Hymns and wails and lamentations mingled in the midnight air,

Sacred songs of vik and nam rose with women's piercing wail,
And the creatures of the wide earth heard the sound subdued and pale,

Smokeless and with radiant lustre shone each red and lighted pyre,
Like the planets of the bright sky throbbing with celestial fire!

Men in nations, countless, nameless, from each court and camp afar,

From the east and west collected, tell in Kuru Kshatra's war,

Thousand fires for them were lighted, they received the pious Such was good Yudhishtira's mandate, such was wise Vidura's
might,

All the dead were burned to ashes and the sacred rite was o'er,
Dhritarastra and Yudhishtira slowly walked to Ganga's shore

OBLATION TO KARNA

Sacred Ganga, ample-boomed, sweeps along in royal pride, Rolling down her impud waters through high banks on either side Childless dames and weeping widows thither in their anguish came Due and holy rites to render to departed chiefs of fame.

Clinging forth their jewelled girdles, gems and scarfs belaced with
gold,

Gave oblations of the water unto warriors true and bold,

Unto fathers, unto kinsmen, unto sons in battle slayed,
Offerings of the sacred water sorrowing wives and mothers made.

And so great the host of mourners wending to perform the rite,
That their footsteps made a pathway in the sad and sacred site.

And the shelving banks of Ganga, peopled by the sorrowing throng,
Wide-expanding, vast and sealike, formed a scene of woe and pain.

But a wave of keener sorrow swept o'er Putha's heaving breast,
As unto her weeping children thus her secret she expressed:

He, O, Mother, the peerless warrior, mighty in his battle car,
 By a will of fate untimely was by Arjun slain in war,
 He was the son of Raudra, O Mother, do not veil the light of His name with Savya's lustre as his countless foes he fought,
 He faced the stoutest warriors and in battle never failed,
 He saved the Kuru race and in doing never quailed,
 He was known as far as process, named in war as he had the name,
 He died, but not his honour and by death hath he gained fame,
 He on earth was never faltered, never left his chariot,
 After his death, O Mother, Karna is my eldest son!
 Can you say you are my elder and the Sun is dead his birth,
 Can you say you are my Son-like and the spacious earth?

Pritha spoke : the Pandav brothers groaned in penitence and pain,
 And they wept in woe and anguish for the brother they had slain,

Missing forth his sigh of anguish like a crushed and wounded snake, Sad Yudhishthir to his mother thus his inward feelings spoke :

'Didst thou, mother, bear the hero fathomless like ocean dread,
 Whose unfailing glistening arrows like its countless billows sped,

Didst thou bear that peerless archer all-resistless in his car, Sweeping with the roar of ocean through the shattered ranks of
 war?

Didst thou hide the mighty warrior, mortal man of heavenly birth,
 Crushing beneath his arm of valour all his toemen on the earth,

Didst thou hide the birth and lineage of that chief of deathful ire,
 As a man in folds of garments seeks to hide the flaming fire?

Arjun welder of Gandiva was for us no truer stay,
 Than was Karna for the Kurus in the battle's dread array,

Monarchs matched not Karna's glory nor his deeds of valour done, Midst the mighty car-borne warriors mightiest warrior Karna shone!

Woe to us ! our eldest brother we have in the battle slain,
And our nearest dearest elder fell upon the gory plain,

Not the death of Abhimanyu from the fair Subhadra torn,
Not the slaughter of the princes by the proud Draupadi borne,

Not the fall of friends and kinsmen and Panchala's mighty host,
Like thy death afflicts my bosom, noble Karna loved and lost !

Monarch's empire, victor's glory, all the treasures earth can yield, Righteous bliss and heavenly gladness, harvest of the heavenly field,

All that wish can shape and utter, all that nourish hope and pride,
All were ours, O noble Karna, hadst thou rested by our side,

And this carnage of the Kurus these sad eyes had never seen, Peace had graced our blessed empire, happy would the earth have been !"

Drona bewailed the sad Yudhishtira for his elder loved and dead,
And oblation of the water to the noble Karna made,

And the royal dames of Kuru viewed the sight with freshening pain
Wept to see the good Yudhishtira offering to his brother slain,

And the widowed queen of Karna with the women of his house, Gave oblations to her hero, wept her loved and slaughtered spouse !

Done the rites to the departed, done oblations to the dead,
Slowly then the sad survivors on the river's margin spread,

Far along the shore and sandbank of the sacred sea-like stream, Mad and matron lay their bodies 'neath the morning's holy beam,

And ablutions done, the Kurus slow and sad and cheerless put,
Wend their way to far Hastina with a void and vacant heart.

BOOK XII

ASWA-MEDHA

(Sacrifice of the Horse)

The real Epic ends with the war and the funerals of the deceased warriors. Much of what follows in the original Sanscrit poem is either episodical, or comparatively recent interpolation. The great and venerable warrior Bhishma, still lying on his death-bed, discourses for the instruction of the newly crowned Yudhishtir on various subjects like the Duties of Kings, the Duties of the Four Castes, and the Four Stages of Life. He repeats the discourses of other sants, of Bhrigu and Bharadwaja, of Manu and Brihaspati, of Vyasa and Saka, of Yajnavalkya and Janaka, of Narada and Narayana. He explains Sankya philosophy and Yoga philosophy, and lays down the laws of Marriage, the laws of Succession, the rules of Gifts, and the rules of Funeral Rites. He preaches the cult of Krishna, and narrates endless legends, tales, traditions, and myths about sages and saints, gods and mortal kings. All this is told in two Books containing about twenty-two thousand couplets, and forming nearly one fourth of the entire Sanscrit Epic !

The reason of adding all this episodical and comparatively recent matter to the ancient Epic is not far to seek. The Epic became more popular with the nation at large than dry codes of law and philosophy, and generations of Brahmanical writers laboured therefore to insert in the Epic itself their rules of caste and moral conduct, their laws and philosophy. There is no more venerable character in the Epic than Bhishma, and these rules and laws have therefore been supposed to come from his lips on the solemn occasion of his death. As a storehouse of Hindu laws and traditions and moral rules these episodes are invaluable ; but they form no part of the real Epic, they are not a portion of the leading story of the Epic, and we pass them by.

Bhishma dies and is cremated ; but the endless exposition of laws, legends, and moral rules is not yet over. Krishna himself takes up the task in a new Book, and, as he has done once before in the Book of the Arrow, he now once more explains to Arjuna the Arjuna the great truths about Soul and Immortality, Creation and the Wheel of Life, True Knowledge and Rules of Penance. The adventures of the same Uruk, whom Krishna meets, then take up a good many pages. All this forms no part of the real Epic, and we pass it by.

Yudhishtira has in the meantime been crowned king of the Kurus at Hastinapura, and a posthumous child of Abhimanyu named Parikshit, and is destined to succeed to the throne of the Kurus. But Yudhishtira's mind is still troubled with the thought of the carnage of the war of which he considers himself guilty, and the great saint Vyasa advises the performance of the Asvamedha, or the Sacrifice of the Horse, for the expiation of the sin.

The Sacrifice of the Horse was an ancient Hindu custom, practised by kings exercising suzerain power over surrounding lands. A horse was let free, and was allowed to wander from place to place, accompanied by the king's guard. If any neighbouring king ventured to detain the animal, it was a signal for war. If a king ventured to restrain the wanderer, it was considered a mark of submission to the owner of the animal. And when the horse returned from its peregrinations, it was sacrificed with great pomp and splendour at a feast to which all neighbouring kings were invited.

Yudhishtira allowed the sacrificial horse to wander at will, and Arjuna accompanied it. Wherever the horse was stopped, Arjuna fought and conquered, and thus proclaimed the supremacy of Yudhishtira over all neighbouring potentates. After various wars and adventures in various regions, Arjuna at last returned victorious with the steed to Hastinapura, and the sacrifice commenced.

The description of the sacrifice is somewhat artificial, and concerns itself with rites and ceremonious details and gifts to Brahmans, and altogether bears unmistakable evidence of the interpolating hand of later priestly writers. Nevertheless we cannot exclude from this translation of the leading incidents of the Epic the last great and crowning act of Yudhishtira, now anointed monarch of Kuruland.

The portion translated in this Book forms Sections LXXV. to LXXVIII. of Section LXXXIII., and XXXIX. of Book XIV. of the Mahabharata.

And on the morrow Arjun bent his homeward way, Leaving still the sacred charge, free to wander as it may,
 So Bhishma struck to Yudhishtira spake of the returning steed, So he to Arjun wending homeward with the victor's crown of meed,

And they sang of Arjun's triumphs in Gandhara's distant vale,
 On the banks of Brahmaputra and in Sindhu's rocky dale.

Twilight came of Magha's bright moon and auspicious was the star,

And he came the victor Arjun from his conquests near and far,
 And Yudhishtira called his brothers, faithful twins and Bhima true,

Spoke to them in gentle accents, and his words were grave and few:

"Behold! Now returneth Arjun with the steed from many a fray,
 So they tell me, noble brother, who have met him on the way,

And the time of asua-medha day by day is drawing nigh, Magha's full moon is approaching, and the winter passeth by,

Let the Brahmans versed in Vedas choose the sacrificial site,
 For the feast of many nations, for the asua-medha rite."

Bhishma heard of Arjun's coming,—hero with the curly hair,—
 And to do Yudhishtira's mandate did with gladsome heart repair.

Brahmans versed in sacrifices, cunning architects of fame,
 Builders of each various altar with the son of Pritha came,

And upon a level greensward measured forth the sacred site
 Laid it out with halls and pathways for the sacrificial rite.

Mansions graced with gem and jewel round the bright arena stood,
Palaces of golden lustre glinted in the morning sun,

Gilt and blazoned with devices lofty columns stood around,
Graceful arches gold summounted spanned the consecrated ground.

Gay pavilions rose in beauty round the sacrificial site,
For the queens of crowned monarchs wending to the holy rite,

Humbler dwellings rose for Brahmans, priests of learning and of
fame,

Come to view Yudhishtir's yajna and to bless Yudhishtir's noble

Messengers with kindly greetings went to monarchs far renowned,
Asked them to Hastina's city, to the consecrated ground,

And to please the great Yudhishtir came each king and chief re-
bold,

With their slaves and dark-eyed damsels, arms and horses gems and
gold,

Came and found a royal welcome in pavilions rich and high,
And the sealike voice of nations smote the echoing vault of sky.

With his greetings did Yudhishtir, for each chief and king of men, Cooling drinks and sumptuous viands, beds of regal pride offer them.

Stables filled with corn and barley, and with milk and luscious cream, Greeted tall and warlike taskers and the steeds with flowing manes.

Munis from their hermitages to the sacred yajna came,
Kishis from the grove and forest lisping BRAHMA's holy name.

Famed Akshayas versed in Vedas to the city held their way, Brahmacharins with grass girdle, chanting sweet the saman lay.

Welcomed Kuru's pious monarch, saint and sage and man of worth,
And with gentle condescension showed each priest his fitting worth.

Skilled mechanics, cunning artists, raised the structures for the rite,
And with every needful object graced the sacrificial site,

Every duty thus completed, joyal was Yudhishtir's mind.

And he blessed his faithful brothers with an elder's blessings and

THE FEASTING

Men in nations are assembled, hymns are sung by saint and sage,
And in learned disputations keen disputants oft engage,

And the concourse of the monarchs view the splendour of the rite,
Like the glorious sky of INDRA is the sacrificial site !

Bright festoons and flaming streamers are on golden arches hung, Groups of men and gay-dressed women form a bright and joyous throng,

Jars of cool and sparkling waters, vessels rich with gold inlaid,
Costly cups and golden vases are in order due arrayed.

Sacrificial stakes of timber with their golden fastenings graced, Consecrated by the mantra are in sumptuous order placed,

Countless creatures of the wide earth, fishes from the lake and flood,
Pataloes and bulls from pasture, beasts of prey from jungle wood,

Birds and every egg-born creature, insects that from moisture spring,

Denizens of cave and mountain for the sacrifice they bring.

Noble chiefs and mighty monarchs gaze in wonder on the site,
Filled with every living object, corn and cattle for the rite,

Curd and cake and sweet confection are for feasting Brahmans spread,

And a hundred thousand people are with sumptuous viands fed !

With the accents of the rain-cloud drum and trumpet raise their voice,

Speak Yudhishtir's noble bounty, bid the sons of men rejoice,

Day by day the holy jajna grows in splendour and in joy,
Rice in hillocks feeds all comers, maid and matron, man and boy,

Lakes of curd and lakes of butter speak Yudhishtir's bounteous feast,

Nations of the Jambu-dwipa share it, greatest and the least !

From a hundred diverse races from a hundred regions came,
 'Twas of good Yama that it's bounty, sang of good Yudhishtir's fame,

And a thousand proud attendants, gay with earrings, garland graces, Carried food unto the feeder and the sweet confections placed,
 Cloths fit for crowned monarchs were unto the Brahmans given, Drinks of rich and cooling fragrance like the nectar-drink of heaven !

SACRIFICE OF ANIMALS

Victor of a hundred battles, Arjun came with conquering steed, Vyasa herald of the Vedas bade the holy rite proceed :

"For the day is come, Yudhishtir, let the sacrifice be done,
 Let the priests repeat the mantra golden as the morning sun !

Threefold bounteous be thy presents and a threefold merit earn,
 For thy wealth of gold is ample, be thy gifts like summer's rain

May the threefold rich performance purify the darkening stain, Blood of warriors and of kinsmen slaughtered on the gory plain

May the mantra's pure ablution wash thee of the cruel sin,
 And the meed of sacrificers may the good Yudhishtir win !"

Vyasa spake ; and good Yudhishtir took the diksha of the rite,
 And commenced the asna-medha gladdening every living wight.

Round the altar's holy lustre moved the priests with sacred awe, Swerved not from the rule of duty, failed not in the sacred law.

Done the rite of pure pravaranya with the pious hymn and lay,
 To the task of abhishta priests and Brahmans led the way,

And the holy Soma-drinkers pressed the sacred Soma plant,
 And performed the pure savana with the solemn saman chant.

Bounty waits on squalid hunger, gifts dispel the suppliant's fear,
 Gold revives the poor and lowly, mercy wipes the mourner's tear.

Heavenly care relieves the stricken by the gracious king's command, Charity with loving sweetness spreads her smile o'er all the land !

Day by day the śrāmadharmā both with sacred rites proceed,
 Day by day on royal bounty poor and grateful myriads feed,

And adept in six Vedāṅgas, strict in vow and rich in lore,
 Sage preceptors, holy teachers, grew in virtue ever more !

Six good stakes of paṭṭa timber, six of hard kṛmāṅga wood,
 Six of seasoned śatānana, on the place of yajña stood,

Two were made of dīvala, pine that on Himalay grows,
 One was made of wood of śikṭha, which the sacrificer knows,

Others stakes of golden lustre quaint with curious carving done,
 Draped in silk and gold brocaded like the constellations shone !

And the consecrated altar built and raised of bricks of gold,
 Shone in splendour like the altar Daksha built in days of old,

Fourteen cubits square the structure, four deep layers of brick in height,

With a pacious winged trunk like an eagle in its flight !

Beasts whose flesh is pure and wholesome, dwellers of the lake or sky,

Prayers, sacred cake varied offering to each heavenly power on
 high,

Hinds of various breed and colour, steeds of mettle true and tried,
 Other creatures, full three hundred, to the many stakes were tied.

Others viewed the feasting, sweet Gaṇadharas woke the song,
 Light like gleams of sunlight on the greensward tripped along,

Ṛṣabhas and Kṛṣṇa-pāṇḍas mingled in the holy rite,
 Men of austere penance stood around the sacred site,

And the great and famed pupils who the holy hymns compiled,
 Admired the royal śrāmadharmā, on the royal yajña smiled !

From the bright ethereal mansions heavenly minstrel Naraḍ came,
 Chorus went with the music, singer of celestial fame,

Cheered by more than mortal music priests their holy task began,
And Yudhishthira's fame and virtue with a brighter lustre shone !

SACRIFICIAL OFFERING OF THE HORSE.

Birds and beasts were immolated for the sacrificial food,
Then before the sacred charger priests in rank and order stood,
And by rules of Veda guided slew the horse of noble breed,
Placed Draupadi, Queen of Kings, by the slain and lifeless steed, Hymns and gifts and deep devotion sanctified the noble Queen, Woman's true and stainless virtue, woman's worth and wisdom keen !

Priests adept in sacred duty cooked the steed with pious rite,
And the steam of welcome fragrance sanctified the sacred site,
Good Yudhishthira and his brothers, by the rules by rishi spoke, Piously inhaled the fragrance and the sin-destroying smoke !
Several limbs and sacred fragments of the courser duly dressed, Priests upon the blazing altar as a pious offering placed,
Vyasa herald of the Vedas raised his voice in holy song, Blessed Hastina's righteous monarch and the many-nationed throng !

GIFTS

Unto Brahmans gave Yudhishthira countless nishkas of bright gold, Unto sage and saintly Vyasa all his realm and wealth untold,
But the bard and ancient rishi who the holy Vedas spake, Rendered back the monarch's present, earthly gift he might not take !

"Thine is Kuru's ancient empire, rule the nations of the earth,
Gods have destined thee as monarch from the moment of thy birth,

Gold and wealth and costly present let the priests and Brahmans hoard,

'Be it thine to rule thy subjects as their father and their lord !'

Krishna too in gentle accents to the doubting monarch said :
'Vyasa speaketh word of wisdom and his mandate be obeyed !'

From the ashva good Yudhishtir then received the Kuru-land,
With a threefold gift of riches gladdened all the priestly band,

Pious priests and grateful nations to their distant regions went,
And his share of presents Vyasa to the ancient Pritha sent.

Fame and virtue Kuru's monarch by the aswa-medha wins,
And the rite of pure ablution cleanses all Yudhishtir's sins,

And he stands amid his brothers, brightly beaming, pure and high,
Even as INDRA stands encircled by the dwellers of the sky,

And the concourse of the monarchs grace Yudhishtir's regal
might,

As the stars and radiant planets grace the stillness of the night !

Gems and jewels in his bounty, gold and garments rich and rare,
Gave Yudhishtir to each monarch, slaves and damsels passing fair,

Loving gifts to dear relations gave the king of righteous fame,
And the grateful parting monarchs blessed Yudhishtir's hallowed name.

Last of all with many tear-drops Krishna mounts his lofty car,
Faithful still in joy or sorrow, faithful still in peace or war,

Arjun's comrade, Bhima's helper, good Yudhishtir's friend of yore,

Krishna leaves Hastina's mansions for the sea-girt Dwarka's shore !

CONCLUSION

The real Epic ends with the war and with the funeral of the deceased warriors, as we have stated before, and Yudhishthir's Horse-Sacrifice is rather a crowning ornament than a part of the solid edifice. What follows the sacrifice is in no sense a part of the real Epic; it consists merely of concluding personal narrative of the heroes who have figured in the poem.

Dhritarashtra retires into a forest with his queen Gandhari, and Pritha, the mother of the Pandav brothers, accompanies them. In the solitude of the forest the old Dhritarashtra sees, as in a vision, the spirits of all the slain warriors, his sons and grandsons and kinsmen, clad and armed as they were in battle. The spirits disappear the morning at the bidding of Vyasa who had called them. At last Dhritarashtra and Gandhari and Pritha are burnt to death in a forest conflagration, death by fire being considered holy.

Krishna at Dwarka meets with strange and tragic adventures. The Vrishnis and the Andhakas become irreligious and addicted to drinking, and fall a prey to internal dissensions. Valadeva and Krishna die shortly after, and the city of the Yadavas is swallowed up by the ocean.

Then follow the two concluding Books of the Epic, the Curse and the Journey, and the Ascent to Heaven, so beautifully rendered into English by Sir Edwin Arnold. On hearing of the death of the friend Krishna, the Pandav brothers place Prakshit, the grandson of Arjun, on the throne, and retire to the Himalayas. Duryodhan drops down dead on the way, then Sahadeva, then Nakul, then Arjun, and then Bhima. Yudhishthir alone proceeds to heaven as a person in a celestial car.

There Yudhishthir undergoes some trial, bathes in the celestial Ganges, and rises with a celestial body. He then meets Krishna now in his heavenly form, blazing in splendour and glory. He meets his brothers whom he had lost on earth, but who are now Immortals in the sky, clad in heavenly forms. In the next

Thus, O Yodhishtira, and introduces him to others who were dear to him on earth, and are dear to him in heaven. Thus speaks INDRA to Yudhishtira :

Thou art the fair Immortal ! Her no human mother bore, Sunder than Lakshmi as Draupadi human shape for thee she wore,
O Wielder of the Trident she was waked to form and life,
Born in royal Drapad's mansion, righteous man, to be thy wife,
These are bright ærial beings, went for thee to lower earth, Here by Drapad's stainless daughter as thy children took their birth !

This is Karna's Dhritrashtra who doth o'er Gandharvas reign,
This is peerless archer Karna, erst on earth by Arjun slain,
And the Sun inuddy splendour, for the Sun inspired his birth,
And the son of chariot-driver he was known upon the earth !

Must the Vasus and the Maruts, midst immortals pure and
bright,
See the friends the faithful Arishnis matchless in their warlike
might.

See the brave Satraki who upheld thy cause so well,
See the Bhogis and Andhakes who in Kuru-kshetra fell !

And the valiant Abhimanyu whom the fair Sulhadra bore, Still he engaged in the battle, slain by fraud in vonder shore,

Abhimanyu son of Arjun, wielder of Arjun's peerless might,
The Lord of Night he ranges, beauteous as the Lord of Night !

Thou, Yodhishtira, is thy father, by thy mother joined in heaven,
 Oft he comes into my mansions in his flowery chariot driven,

This is Bhishma stainless warrior, by the Gods is his place,
By the god of heavenly wisdom teacher Drona sits in grace !

These and other mighty warriors in the earthly battle slain,
In their mansions and their thrones rank the bright æthereal plain,

*They have cast their mortal bodies, crossed the radiant gate of heaven,
For to win celestial mansions unto mortals it is given.*

Let them strive by kindly action, gentle speech, or doance bright, Brighter than ever before future unto sons of men to bring.

TRANSLATOR'S EPILOGUE.

Ancient India, like ancient Greece boasts of two great Epics. One of them, the Maha-bharata, relates to a great war in which all the warlike races of Northern India took a share, and may therefore be compared to the Iliad. The other, the Ramayana, relates mainly to the adventures of its hero, banished from his country and wandering for long years in the wildernesses of Southern India, and may therefore be compared to the Odyssey. It is the first of these two Epics, the Iliad of Ancient India, which is the subject of the foregoing pages.

The great war which is the subject of this Epic is believed to have been fought in the thirteenth or fourteenth century before Christ. For generations and centuries after the war its main incidents must have been sung by bards and minstrels in the courts of Northern India. The war thus became the centre of a cycle of legends, songs, and poems in ancient India, even as Charlemagne and Arthur became the centres of legends in mediæval Europe. And then, probably under the direction of some enlightened king, this vast mass of legends and poetry, accumulated during centuries, was cast in a narrative form and formed the Epic of the Great Bharata nation, and therefore called the Maha-bharata. The real facts of the war had been obliterated by age, legendary heroes had become the principal actors, and, as is invariably the case in India, a thread of a high moral purpose, of the triumph of virtue and the subjugation of vice, was woven into the fabric of the great Epic.

We should have been thankful if this Epic, as it was thus originally put together some centuries before the Christian era, had been reserved to us. But this was not to be. The Epic became so popular that it went on growing with the growth of centuries. Every generation of poets had something to add; every distant nation in Northern India was anxious to interpolate some account of its deeds in the old record of the international war; every preacher of a new creed desired to have in the old Epic some sanction for the new truths he inculcated. Passages from legal and moral codes were incorporated in the work which appealed to the nation much more effectively than dry codes; and rules about the different castes and about the different stages of the human life were included for the same purpose. All the floating mass of tales, traditions, legends, and myths, for which ancient India was famous, found a shelter under the expanding wings of this wonderful Epic, and as Krishna worship became the prevailing religion of India after the decay of Buddhism, the old Epic caught the complexion of the times, and Krishna cult is its dominating religious idea in its present shape. It is thus that the work went on growing for a thousand years after it was first compiled and put together in the form of an Epic; until the crystal rill of the Epic itself was all but lost in an unending morass of religious and didactic episodes, legends, tales, and traditions.

When the mischief had been done, and the Epic had reassumed its present proportions, a few centuries after Christ according to the late Dr. Bühler, an attempt was made to prevent further expansion of the work. The contents of the Epic were described in some prefatory verses, and the number of couplets in each Book was stated. The total number of couplets, according to this metrical preface, is about eighty five thousand. But this so fixed has been exceeded in still later centuries; rather additions and interpolations have been made; and the Epic as printed and published in Calcutta in this century contains over ninety thousand couplets, excluding the Supplement about the Race of Hari.

The modern reader will now understand the reason why the great Epic—the greatest work of imagination that Asia has produced—has never yet been put before the European reader in a readable form. A poem of ninety thousand couplets, about seven times the size of the Iliad and the Odyssey put together, is more than what the average reader can stand; and the heterogeneous nature of its contents does not add to the interest of the work. If the religious works of Hooker and Jeremy Taylor, the philosophy of Hobbes and Locke, the commentaries of Blackstone and the ballads of Percy, together with the tractarian writings of Newman, Keble, and Pusey, were all thrown into blank verse and incorporated with the Poem Lost, the reader would scarcely be much to blame if he ruled it appreciate that celestial compound. A complete translation of the Mahabharata therefore into English verse is neither possible nor desirable, but portions of it have now and then been placed before English readers by distinguished writers. Dean Milman's beautiful rendering of the story of Nala and Damayantu is still read and appreciated by a select circle of readers; and Sir Edwin Arnold's beautiful translation of the concluding books of the Epic is familiar to a larger circle of Englishmen. A complete translation of the Epic into English prose has also been published in India, and is useful to Sanscrit scholars for the purpose of reference.

But although the old Epic has thus been spoilt by unlimited expansion, yet nevertheless the leading incidents and characters of the real Epic are still discernible, uninjured by the mass of foreign substance in which they are embedded— even like those immortal marble figures which have been recovered from the ruins of an ancient world, and now beautify the museums of modern Europe. For years past I have thought that it was perhaps not impossible to exhumate this buried Epic from the superincumbent mass of episodic matter, and to restore it to the modern world. For years past I have felt a longing to undertake this work, but the task was by no means an easy one. Leaving out all episodic matter, the leading narrative of the Epic forms about one fourth of the work; and a complete translation even of this leading story would be unreadable, both from its length and its prolixness. On the other hand, to condense the story into shorter limits would be, not to make a translation, but virtually to write a new poem; and that was not what I desired to undertake, nor what I was competent to perform.

There seemed to me only one way out of this difficulty. The main incidents of the Epic are narrated in the original work in passages which are neither dilute nor unduly prolix, and which are interspersed in the leading narrative of the Epic, as that narrative itself is interspersed in the midst of more lengthy episodes. The more carefully I examined the arrangement, the more clearly it appeared to me that these main incidents of the Epic would bear full and unabridged translation into English verse; and that these translations, linked together by short connecting notes, would virtually present the entire story of the Epic to the modern reader in a form and within limits which might be acceptable. It would be, no doubt, a condensed version of the original Epic, but the condensation would be effected, not by the translator telling a short story in his own language, but by linking together those passages of the original which describe the main and striking incidents, and thus telling the main story as told in the original work. The advantage of this arrangement is that, in the passages presented to the reader, it is the poet who speaks to him, not the translator. Though vast portions of the original are skipped over, those which are presented are the portions which narrate the main incidents of the Epic, and they describe those incidents as told by the poet himself.

This is the plan I have generally adopted in the present work. Except in the three books which describe the actual war (Books viii., ix., and x.), the other nine books of this translation are complete translations of selected passages of the original work. I have not attempted to condense these passages nor to expand them; I have endeavored to put them before the English reader as they have been told by the poet in Sanscrit. Occasionally, but rarely, a few redundant couplets have been left out, or a long list of proper names or obscure allusions has been shortened; and in one place only at the beginning of the Fifth Book, I have added twelve couplets of my own to explain the circumstances under which the story of Savitri is told. Generally, therefore, the translation may be accepted as an unabridged, though necessarily a free translation of the passages describing the main incidents of the Epic.

From this method I have been compelled to depart, and so, against my wish, in the three books describing the actual war. A translation of an Epic relating to a great war can be acceptable which does not narrate the main events of the war. The war of the Mahabharata was a series of eighteen battles, fought on eighteen consecutive days, and I felt it necessary to present the reader with an account of each day's work. In order to do so, I have been compelled to condense, and not merely to translate, selected passages. For the transactions of the war, unlike the other incidents of the Epic, have been narrated in the original with almost inconceivable prolixity and endless repetition, and the process of condensation in these three books has therefore been severe and thorough. But, nevertheless, even in these books I have endeavored to preserve the character and the spirit of the original. No only are the incidents narrated in the same order as in the original, but they are told in the style of the poet as far as possible. Even the similes and metaphors and figures of speech are all or mostly adopted from the original; the translator has not ventured either to adopt his own distinct style of narration, or to improve on the style of the original with his own decorations.

Such is the scheme I have adopted in presenting an Epic of twenty thousand Sanscrit couplets in about two thousand English couplets.

The excellent and deservedly popular prose translation of the Odyssey of Homer by Messrs. Butcher and Lang often led me to think that perhaps a prose translation of these selected passages from the Mahabharata might be more acceptable to the modern reader. But a more serious consideration of the question dispelled that idea. Homer has an interest for the European reader which the Mahabharata cannot lay claim to: as the father of European poetry he has a claim on the veneration of modern Europe which an Indian poet can never pretend to. To thousands of European readers Homer is familiar in the original, to hundreds of thousands he is known in various translations in various modern languages. What Homer actually wrote, a numerous class of students in Europe wish to know; and a literal prose translation therefore is welcome, after the great Epic has been so often translated in verse. The case is very different with the Mahabharata, practically unknown to European readers. And the translators of Homer themselves recently acknowledge, "We have tried to transfer not all the truth about the poem, but the historical truth into English. In this process Homer must lose at least half his charm, his bright and equable speed, the musical current of that narrative, which, like the river of Egypt, flows from an undiscoverable source, and waters the temples and the palaces of unforgotten gods and kings. Without the music of verse, only a half-truth about Homer can be told."

Another earnest worker of the present day, who is endeavouring to interpret to modern Englishmen the thoughts and sentiments and poetry of their Anglo-Saxon ancestors, has emphatically declared that "of all possible translations of poetry, a merely prose translation is the most inaccurate." "Prose," says Mr. Stopford Brooke, further on, "no more represents poetry than architecture does make. "Translations of poetry are never much good, but at least they should always endeavour to have the musical movement of poetry, and to obey the laws of the verse they translate."

This appears to me to be a very sound maxim. And one of my greatest difficulties in the task I have undertaken has been to try and preserve something of the "musical movement" of the sonorous Sanscrit poetry in the English translation. Much of the Sanscrit Epic is written in the well-known Śloka metre of sixteen syllable in each line, and I endeavoured to choose some English metre which is familiar to the English ear, and which would reproduce to some extent the rhythm, the majesty, and the long and measured sweep of the Sanscrit verse. It was necessary to adopt such a metre in order to transfer something of the truth about the Mahā Bharata into English, for without such reproduction or imitation of the musical movement of the original very much less than a half-truth is told. My kind friend Mr. Edmund Russell, impelled by that enthusiasm for Indian poetry and Indian art which is a part of him, rendered me valuable help and assistance in this matter, and I gratefully acknowledge the benefit I have derived from his advice and suggestions. After considerable trouble and anxiety, and after rendering several books in different English metres, I felt convinced that the one finally adopted was a new approach to the Sanscrit Śloka than any other familiar English metre known to me.

I have recited a verse in this English metre and a Śloka in the presence of listeners who have a better ear for music than myself, and they have marked the close resemblance. I quote a few lines from the Sanscrit showing varieties of the Śloka metre, and compare them with the scheme of the English metre selected.

It would be too much to assume that even with the help of this metre in metres, I have been able to transfer into my English that sweep and majesty of verse which is the charm of Sanscrit, and which often sustains and elevates the simplest narration and the truest ideas. Without the support of those sustaining wings, my poor narration must often plod through the dust ; and I can only ask for the indulgence of the reader, which every translator of poetry from a foreign language can with reason ask, if the story as told in the translation is sometimes but a plain, simple, and homely narrative. For any artistic decoration I have noticed the inclination not the necessary qualification. The crisp and ornate style, the quaint expression, the choiced word, the new-coined phrase, in which modern English poetry is rich, would scarcely suit the translation of an old Epic whose predominating characteristic is its simple and easy flow of narrative. Indeed, the Mahabharata would lose that unadorned simplicity which is its first and foremost feature if the translator ventured to decorate it with the art of the modern day, even if he had been qualified to do so.

For if there is one characteristic feature which distinguishes the Mahabharata (as well as the other Indian Epic, the Ramayana) from all later Sanscrit literature, it is the grand simplicity of its narrative, which contrasts with the artificial graces of later Sanscrit poetry. The poetry of Kalidasa, for instance, is ornate and beautiful, and almost simulates with similes in every verse; the poetry of the Mahabharata is plain and unpolished, and scarcely stoops to a simile or a figure of speech unless the simile comes naturally to the poet. The great deeds of godlike kings sometimes suggest to the poet the mighty deeds of gods; the rushing of warriors suggests the rushing of angry elephants in the echoing jungle; the flight of whistling arrows suggests the flight of sea-birds; the sound and movement of surging crowds suggest the heaving of billows; the erect attitude of a warrior suggests a tall cliff; the beauty of a maiden suggests the soft beauty of the blue lotus. When such comparisons come naturally to the poet he accepts them and notes them down, but he never seems to go in quest of them, he is never anxious to beautify and decorate. He seems to trust entirely to his grand narrative, to his heroic character, to his stirring incidents, to hold millions of listeners in perpetual thrall. The majestic and sonorous Sanscrit metre is at his command, and even this he uses carelessly, and with frequent slips, known as ustha to later grammarians. The poet certainly seeks for no art to decorate his tale, he trusts to the lofty chronicle of bygone heroes to enchain the listening mankind.

And what heroes! In the delineation of character the Mahabharata is far above anything which we find in later Sanscrit poetry. Indeed, with much that is fresh and sweet and lovely in later Sanscrit poetry, there is little or no portraiture of character. All heroes are cast much in the same heroic mould; all love-sick in silence and burn with fever, all fools are shrewd and all honest by turns, all knaves are heartless and cruel and subtle in the end. There is not much to distinguish between one warrior and another, between one tender woman and her sister. In the Mahabharata we find just the reverse; each hero has a distinct individuality, a character of his own, clearly discernible from that of other heroes. No work of the imagination that could be named, excepting the Iliad, is so rich and so true as the Mahabharata in the portraiture of the human character, not in torment and suffering as in Dante, not under overwhelming passions as in Scott's poems, but human character in its calm dignity or strength and grandeur, like the immortal figures in marble which the ancients carried out, and which modern sculptors have vainly sought to reproduce. The old Kuru monarch Drona-nashtra, sightless and feeble, but majestic in his ancient grandeur; the noble grand ire Bhishma, "death's sabduer" and unconquerable in war; the great Druma, venerable priest and vengeful warrior; and the proud and peerless archer Karna have each a distinct character of his own which cannot be mistaken for a moment. The good and valiant Yudhishtar, (I omit the final a in some long names which occur frequently), the "tiger-waisted" Bhuma, and the "helmet-bearing" Arjuna are the Agamemnon, the Ajax, and the Achilles of the Indian Epic. The proud and unyielding Duryodhan, and the fierce and fiery Dushasan stand out foremost among the wrathful sons of the feeble old Kuru monarch. And Krishna possesses a character higher than that of Ulysses; unmatched in human wisdom, ever striving for righteousness and peace, he is thorough and unrelenting in war when war has begun. And the women of the Indian Epic possess characters as marked as those of the men. The stately and majestic queen Gandhari, the loving and doting mother Pritha, the proud and scornful Draupadi nursing her wrath till her wrongs are fearfully revenged, and the bright and brilliant and sunny Sabhadra, these are distinct images pencilled by the hand of a true master in the realm of creative imagination.

And if the characters of the Mahabharata impress themselves on the reader, the incidents of the Epic are no less striking. Every scene on the shifting stage is a perfect and impressive picture. The tournament of the princes in which Arjun and Karna—the Achilles and Hector of the Indian Epic—first met and each marked the other for his sake, the rescue of Draupadi, the splendid, gorgeous coronation of Yudhishtira and the death of the proud and haughty Sisupala, the birth of Arjuna and the scornful wrath of Draupadi against her husband, the calm beauty of the forest life of the Pandavs, the cattle-burn in Matsyaland in which the valiant Arjuna threw on his discus and stood forth as warrior and conqueror; and the Homeric speeches of the warriors in the council of war on the eve of the great contest, each scene of the venerable old Epic represents itself on the mind of the interested and astounded reader. Then follows the war of eighteen days. The first few days are more or less uneventful, and have been condensed in this translation often into a few couplets, but the interest of the reader increases as he approaches the final battle and fall of the grand old warrior Bhishma. Then follows the stirring story of the death of Arjuna's palmy boy, and Arjuna's fierce revenge, and the death of the priest and warrior, doer of Drona. Last comes the crowning event of the Epic, the final contest between Arjuna and Karna, the heroes of the Epic, and the war ends in a magnificent slaughter and the death of Darvodhan. The rest of the story is told in this translation in two books describing the funerals of the deceased warriors, and Yudhishtira's horse-sacrifice.

"The poems of Homer," says Mr. Gladstone, "differ from all other known poetry in this that they constitute in themselves an encyclopædia of life and knowledge; at a time when knowledge, indeed, such as lies beyond the bounds of actual experience, was extremely limited, and when life was singularly fresh, vivid, and expensive." This remark applies with even greater force to the Mahabharata. It is an encyclopædia of the life and knowledge of Ancient India. And it discloses to us an ancient and forgotten world, a proud and noble civilisation which has passed away. No other India was then parcelled among warring races, given up side by side under their warlike emperors, speaking the same language, performing the same religious rites and ceremonies, retaining the same literature, rivaling each other in their schools of philosophy and learning as in the arts of peace and civilisation, and forming a confederation of Hindu nations unknown to, and unknowing the outside world. What this confederation of nations has done for the cause of human knowledge and human civilisation is a matter of history. Then we enter into the section relat-of religion, embalmed in the ancient Upanishads, have never been excelled within the last three thousand years. Their inquiries into philosophy, preserved in the Sankhya and the Vedanta systems, were the first systems of true philosophy which the world produced. And their great works of imagination, the Maha-bharata and the Ramayana will be placed without hesitation by the side of Homer by critics who survey the world's literatures from a lofty standpoint, and judge impartially of the wares turned out by the hand of man in all parts of the globe. It is scarcely necessary to add that the discoveries of the ancient Hindus in science, and specially in mathematics, are the heritage of the modern world; and that the lofty religion of Buddha, proclaimed in India five centuries before Christ, is now the religion of a third of the human race.

For the rest, the people of modern India know how to appreciate their ancient heritage. It is not an exaggeration to state that the two hundred millions of Hindus of the present day cherish in their hearts the story of their ancient Epics. The Hindu scarcely lives, man or woman, high or low, educated or ignorant, whose earliest recollections do not cling round the story and the characters of the great Epics. The almost illiterate oil-manufacturer or confectioner of Bengal spells out some modern translation of the Maha-bharata to while away his leisure hour. The tall and stalwart peasantry of the North-West know of the five Pandav brothers, and of their friend the righteous Krishna. The people of Bombay and Madras cherish with equal ardour the story of the righteous war. And even the traditions and tales interspersed in the Epic, and which spoil the work as an Epic, have themselves a charm and an attraction; and the morals inculcated in these tales sink into the hearts of a naturally religious people, and form the basis of their moral education. Mothers in India know no better theme for imparting wisdom and instruction to their daughters, and elderly men know no richer storehouse for narrating tales to children than these stories preserved in the Epics. No work in Europe, not Homer in Greece or Virgil in Italy, not Shakespeare or Milton in English-speaking lands, is the national property of the nations to the same extent as the Epics of India are of the Hindus. No single work except the Bible has such influence in affording moral instruction in Christian lands as the Maha-bharata and the Ramayana in India. They have been the cherished heritage of the Hindus for three thousand years ; they are to the present day interwoven with the thoughts and beliefs and moral ideas of a nation numbering two hundred millions.
